

2 PARTISAN AUDIENCES CHEER RIVERS, REDWINE

for the gubernatorial candidate from the neighboring county than it was for Talmadge himself.

Speaker Rivers, mounting the platform shortly before 10 o'clock this morning, opened the day's program. He stuck chiefly to the issues of the campaign, making only slight reference to Judge Fortson and pointed references to Redwine only in connection with the senate president's support of the Talmadge administration.

"I am sorry that my other engagements will not permit me to spend the day here," the speaker declared. "However, I want everyone here to know that I shall take notice of everything that is said here today and will answer it at the proper time. We are too busy engaged in a momentous campaign at present to take note of the things which do not count. Some matters can wait adjustment until after September 9."

Speaker Rivers then launched into a discussion of his platform, which features enactment of an old age pension and free school books for the pupils of all of Georgia's public schools, both grade and high schools.

Roosevelt Applauded. It was clearly a Rivers crowd. It almost had to be gathered so early in the day. Time and again as the speaker drove home his points he was halted by tumults of applause. Like other candidates for the governorship he was allotted only 30 minutes and he did not attempt to go into all of the issues of the campaign. Many in the crowd were Roosevelt and Russell as well as Rivers buttons and every mention of President Roosevelt as well as every thrust at Governor Talmadge was the signal for a new round of applause.

Rivers discussed rather fully his plan for enactment of a law permitting Georgia to share in the old age pension provisions of the Roosevelt social security act. "In every speech I have made since the social security act was adopted by congress last year I have stressed the need for our state participating in the benefits of it," Speaker Rivers said. "The only opposition comes from the wealthy people who pay federal income taxes, which provide the $15 a month the federal government plans to give the old folks of Georgia."

"I have heard a number of wealthy people say they are for old age pensions 'but' that means they are trying to butt our plea to death. If they tell you that just put them down as being against old age pensions."

Talmadge Veto. He recounted how the general assembly had passed an old age pension plan during the last session only to have it vetoed by Governor Talmadge. "The only way that Talmadge could keep the senate from voting to override that veto was through his 'me, too,' president of that body," Rivers declared. "The house of representatives voted to override it with only one or two dissenting votes. But when the senators refused to bring the veto up for a vote, Senator Redwine refused to even let them vote on it."

Rivers told his audience that he felt that all of the pupils, both those in the high schools as well as in the elementary schools, should have free school books.

He concluded with a plea for the Speaker Rivers is halted by an ardent supporter as he leaves the platform at Griffin. Just how ardent the supporter is, the placards tell. Not shown in his hat are Rivers and Russell stickers.

Here's a part of the Talmadge show at Griffin. Supporters of the Governor, carrying signs and sitting on cotton they have given him, are shown near the speaker's stand, as Talmadge was speaking.

Senator Russell didn't finish his day at Griffin when he concluded his speech. Thousands of his followers grouped around the platform waiting for a handshake and delayed his departure.

voters to stand true to their democracy and vote for him on September 9. As the Lakeland candidate ended his speech, a thundering wave of applause swept over the grounds. It continued for several minutes as Rivers drove off to keep an afternoon engagement at Crawfordville.

Five minutes after Speaker Rivers left the stand Judge Fortson came on. The crowd stood silent as he was introduced. It remained silent as he explained that he was a few minutes late because of the heavy traffic in and around Griffin. Then Judge Fortson launched into the reading of a prepared speech. He said he would read it in order that there might not be any misquotations.

Opposes Redwine Planks. A mild wave of applause was given the jurist as he told the crowd that he is practically against everything for which Senator Redwine stands. Following his brief opposition to Redwine's program Judge Fortson launched into his attack on Speaker Rivers. His first mention of the Lakeland candidate drew a few "boos" from the crowd.

As he proceeded to reiterate his ridicule of the Rivers platform the chorus of "boos" grew louder and from many sections of the crowd, which had changed but little since Rivers made his speech, there were cries: "Hurrah for Rivers!" "Hurrah for Rivers!"

In the first few sentences of the Rivers attack, Judge Fortson renewed his attack on Clark Howell, democratic national committeeman for Georgia. Like the mention of Rivers, the mention of Mr. Howell drew a new chorus of "boos." From all over the grounds came cries of "Hurrah for Clark Howell!" "Hurrah for Clark Howell!"

Judge Fortson charged that Mr. Howell and Speaker Rivers both, during the early stages of the Talmadge attack on Roosevelt, aided Talmadge to some extent.

Rising Hostility. Facing a rising hostility from the crowd, Judge Fortson made mention of the affidavits from republican leaders of Ware county, charging that four years ago Rivers attempted to sell his weekly newspaper to the G. O. and become that party's candidate for congress.

"Where's your red galluses," a voice in the crowd shouted. "Get out of the race," a woman screamed.

The boing continued for several minutes. Judge Fortson laid aside his prepared text and said: "If you are here to listen remain. If all you want is noise, go elsewhere."

This plea for attention only served to stir the crowd further and as Judge Fortson prepared to read two more republican affidavits, the boos rose in crescendo.

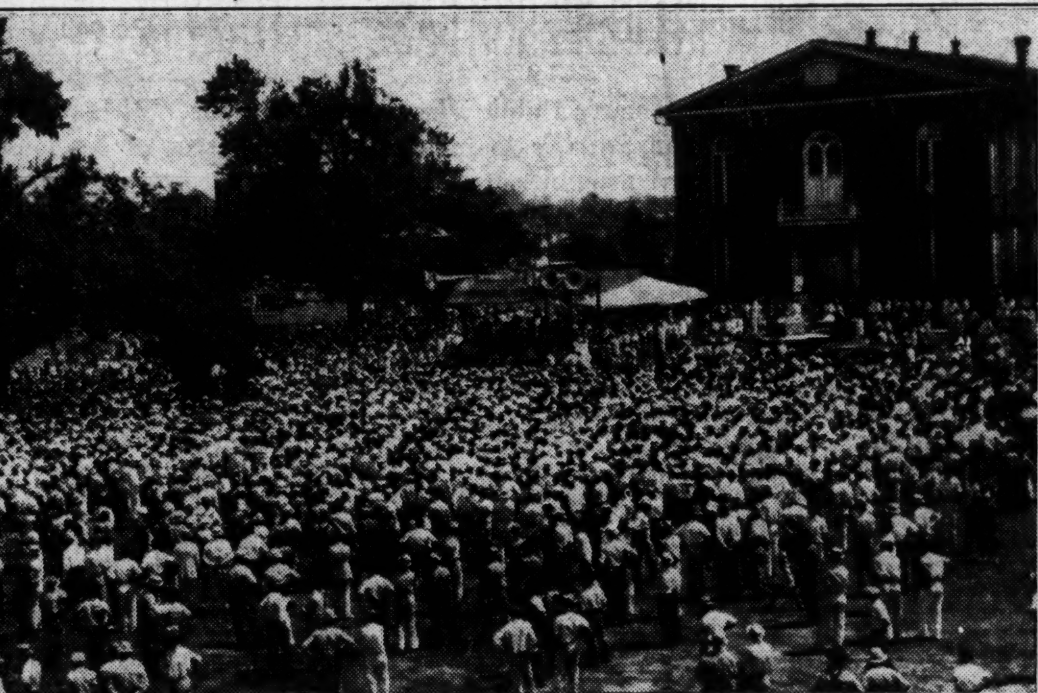

"What more republicans?" came the question. "Give Us Democrats."

"Give us some more democrats," another voice shouted. "We don't want to hear from republicans," another voice came forth. "Well, I know you don't want to hear these," Judge Fortson countered. "But they are evidence and you've got to listen to them."

The crowd grew more responsive as Judge Fortson read his new affidavits, both from Glynn county republican leaders who asserted that they were in the Waycross meeting where the alleged negotiations were said to have taken place.

Republican Affidavits. The affidavits follow: "Brunswick, Ga.

"Personally appeared before me H. Ralph Smith, who upon being duly sworn deposes and says that he is a member of the executive committee of the eighth district republican organization of Georgia and that he was in attendance at all the meetings in Waycross at which the proposition of Mr. E. D. Rivers was made by Mr. Rivers to the republican executive committee: that he (Rivers) made his proposition after the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt at Chicago, and that the facts as set forth in the affidavits of Dr. H. J. Carswell, of Waycross, and Mr. Wilton F. Davis, of Waycross, and Mr. Walter A. Seamon, of Waycross, and made by these gentlemen in the city of Waycross, Georgia, under date of August 19, 1936, are true and correct in every detail with reference to his (Rivers) running for congress from the eighth congressional district upon the republican ticket and with reference to his (Rivers) converting his newspaper, The Ed Rivers Ben Ford Affidavit. "Brunswick, Ga.

"Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, an officer duly qualified to administer oaths, one Ben J. Ford, known to me, who being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he is chairman of the republican organization of Glynn county, Georgia, and that he was present at the meetings of the republicans of the eighth congressional district of Georgia at which Mr. E. D. Rivers took part and made his proposition with regard to running for congress upon the republican ticket in 1932, that he (Rivers) would actively campaign in the interest of the republican party and that his (Rivers) proposition was made after the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt at Chicago, Ill., in 1932. (Signed) "BEN J. FORD."

"Sworn to and subscribed to before me this 24th day of August, 1936. (Seal) "H. D. SYMONS, J. P."

Boing Resumed. The boing was resumed when the reading of the affidavits was completed. Judge Fortson, perspiring freely, stopped to take a drink of water.

Then he went back to his discussion of his opposition to Redwine. The time the boys in the red suspenders, waiting around for their favorites, took up the boing but they stayed on it only a few minutes. The jurist was permitted to complete his talk without interruption except for scattered applause for his attacks on Redwine. This applause came from some of those who had a few minutes before booed him for attacking Rivers. It was apparent that attacks were permissible, depending on who was attacked.

Judge Fortson was interrupted for a minute or two near the end of his speech by the arrival of the Russell motorcade from Winder.

A barbecue followed the Russell address and an almost entirely new crowd gathered in the early afternoon to hear Senator Redwine.

It was a decidedly Redwine crowd, with the large Fayette county delegation posting itself directly in front of the speakers' stand and cheering the Talmadge candidate's every phrase. A cheer leader sat atop a bale of cotton. Every time the candidate reached a stopping place in his sentences the cheer leader started and the others fell in with a vim.

Use Fortson Charges. Redwine made some capital of the Fortson charges against Rivers. These charges which had drawn boos for Fortson drew cheers for Redwine. These references were all that Redwine said concerning Fortson, the Fayetteville man centering his attack on Rivers.

During his discussion of the situation, Senator Redwine took up old age pensions, asserting that he considered old age pensions a "noble sentiment."

"After a while when we see where the money is coming from we can talk about old age pensions," he said. "I'm not going to do as Rivers is doing, promise them."

Senator Redwine declared that he was the only businessman in the race and promised a business administration of the affairs of the state government.

He concluded as Governor Talmadge came on the platform to make the closing address of the day.

The appearance of the three candidates on the same platform on the same day apparently did not upset the situation as some observers believed it would. Rivers' crowd was with him. Redwine's crowd was with him. Rivers, greeted by such a large throng at such an early hour, appeared more than pleased. Redwine, welcomed by a large crowd in which his fellow citizens of Fayette predominated, apparently was pleased. Judge Fortson, the all-hands-agree minority candidate, was sandwiched between a crowd which wanted to hear Rivers at such an early hour, appeared neither gained nor lost during the day.

QUERIES BY RUSSELL MEET DEAD SILENCE

He based his attack largely on the fact that Senator Russell had approved democratic administration measures which reduced cotton acreage and other crops.

Basis of Attack.

He based his attack largely on the fact that Senator Russell had approved democratic administration measures which reduced cotton acreage and other crops.

But he touched but lightly only three of the 15 Russell questions, which are reproduced in full in the accounts of the speeches below. Nor did he mention his visit to the tomb of Lincoln, at Springfield, where he helped to launch the republican campaign.

The accounts of the speeches follow, with Senator Russell's, who spoke first, preceding that of Governor Talmadge who spoke in the afternoon.

LEOPARD CANNOT CHANGE SPOTS, SAYS RUSSELL

GRiffin, Ga., Aug. 26.—The leopard cannot change his spots," he said, and the crowd roared. They knew what was coming.

"That same Eugene Talmadge who said a few months ago when he was consorting with republican industrialists that it would be a national calamity for the democratic party and administration to be returned to Washington is the same Eugene Talmadge who appears before you today asking the democrats of this state to send him to Washington to join the little group of republican die-hards who would hamper and harass Franklin D. Roosevelt and the democratic party."

"We Won't Send Him."

"We won't send him," screamed the crowd, which stretched far before him and at each side.

It was a crowd which hung on every word and cheered every word which the democratic speaker gave them in the greatest campaign speech of his career here today.

And when, in concluding, he read them a series of question, priorities, which he was leaving for Eugene Talmadge to answer, they cheered and cheered and cheered again and promised, with a forest of hands, better living conditions on the farm, better wages and conditions for the toiler, establish a humane government, give aid to the old and afflicted, aid the young, the one man to speak sincerely of his physical infirmities.

Humane Government.

"I call on you to point to one single plank in the McRae platform, copy of which I leave on this desk, which will benefit the farmer, or the working man or result in higher prices of farm commodities, better living conditions on the farm, better wages and conditions for the toiler, establish a humane government, give aid to the old and afflicted, aid the young, the one man to speak sincerely of his physical infirmities."

Before he read those questions Richard B. Russell said, that while Talmadge made false charges almost as fast as they could be nailed down, he wanted to mention a few.

Calls for Apology.

"He is now claiming to be a democrat," he said.

"He isn't, he isn't," yelled the crowd.

"I said in my second speech, after reading that McRae platform which he now tries to desert and recall, that I would try to improve on nature and make a democrat out of Eugene before this campaign was over."

"Old republican Gene," they yelled, "He isn't changed. He's a liar still."

"When the President of the United States, the greatest friend the south ever had, appeared in Atlanta there were five governors of other southern states there, but the Governor of Georgia absented himself from the city."

$10,000 Fee.

"When it came time for the nomination fees to be made, Eugene Talmadge had the fee made $10,000 in Georgia. He knew his rich republican friends in the Liberty League would give him that much in a second. But he didn't think the President of the United States could get that much in the state. But the democrats, my friends, raised the money."

"And Gene Talmadge, who thought he might run for President, backed down and he raised the white flag while the democrats raised the money for Franklin D. Roosevelt."

"A man who works in a mill showed me last week a Talmadge and Hoover card which showed that in 1932 he worked 60 hours a week and got $5.40 a week. And then he showed me a Roosevelt and Russell card which showed he worked 40 hours last week and got $12 for it."

"When Gene backed down he said he could fool the Georgia people and run for the senate and go off to join those republicans who harass the administration and fight the President."

McRae Platform.

"I want to read that McRae platform."

"I wouldn't read it if you handed it down to me," shouted a farmer.

"I want to read it," he continued. "And if you find the world's first, preceding that of Governor Talmadge who spoke in the afternoon."

"I don't blame Gene for getting off on this. Why, he's been trying to climb up on mine. He started saying he would cut out all the benefit payments and now he says he would increase them."

"When he stayed off up there with the rich republicans, who took him up on the mountain tops and showed him the promised land, he forgot the people who made him. And he has not one constructive measure in his platform."

Deadly Parallel.

The questions left for Talmadge to answer provided a deadly parallel for the Talmadge platform. And this was a crowd which was eager to hear, which drank up the words, which listened intently for the truth promised them by Russell.

The questions, taken from the Talmadge McRae platform, make up one of the most powerful political instruments yet offered in the campaign.

They followed in their deadly and complete arrangement of the man who has consistently and bitterly opposed the democratic president of the United States. The one man to speak sincerely of his physical infirmities.

The questions left for Talmadge to answer provided a deadly parallel for the Talmadge platform. And this was a crowd which was eager to hear, which drank up the words, which listened intently for the truth promised them by Russell.

The questions, taken from the Talmadge McRae platform, make up one of the most powerful political instruments yet offered in the campaign.

They followed in their deadly and complete arrangement of the man who has consistently and bitterly opposed the democratic president of the United States. The one man to speak sincerely of his physical infirmities.

Humane Government.

"I call on you to point to one single plank in the McRae platform, copy of which I leave on this desk, which will benefit the farmer, or the working man or result in higher prices of farm commodities, better living conditions on the farm, better wages and conditions for the toiler, establish a humane government, give aid to the old and afflicted, aid the young, the one man to speak sincerely of his physical infirmities."

Before he read those questions Richard B. Russell said, that while Talmadge made false charges almost as fast as they could be nailed down, he wanted to mention a few.

Calls for Apology.

"He is now claiming to be a democrat," he said.

"He isn't, he isn't," yelled the crowd.

"I said in my second speech, after reading that McRae platform which he now tries to desert and recall, that I would try to improve on nature and make a democrat out of Eugene before this campaign was over."

"Old republican Gene," they yelled, "He isn't changed. He's a liar still."

"When the President of the United States, the greatest friend the south ever had, appeared in Atlanta there were five governors of other southern states there, but the Governor of Georgia absented himself from the city."

$10,000 Fee.

"When it came time for the nomination fees to be made, Eugene Talmadge had the fee made $10,000 in Georgia. He knew his rich republican friends in the Liberty League would give him that much in a second. But he didn't think the President of the United States could get that much in the state. But the democrats, my friends, raised the money."

"And Gene Talmadge, who thought he might run for President, backed down and he raised the white flag while the democrats raised the money for Franklin D. Roosevelt."

"A man who works in a mill showed me last week a Talmadge and Hoover card which showed that in 1932 he worked 60 hours a week and got $5.40 a week. And then he showed me a Roosevelt and Russell card which showed he worked 40 hours last week and got $12 for it."

"When Gene backed down he said he could fool the Georgia people and run for the senate and go off to join those republicans who harass the administration and fight the President."

McRae Platform.

"I want to read that McRae platform."

"I wouldn't read it if you handed it down to me," shouted a farmer.

"I want to read it," he continued. "And if you find the world's first, preceding that of Governor Talmadge who spoke in the afternoon."

"I don't blame Gene for getting off on this. Why, he's been trying to climb up on mine. He started saying he would cut out all the benefit payments and now he says he would increase them."

"When he stayed off up there with the rich republicans, who took him up on the mountain tops and showed him the promised land, he forgot the people who made him. And he has not one constructive measure in his platform."

less the government does go into the lending business."

Tax Repeal.

3. Your platform advocates stopping all government checks to farmers by repeal of the federal income tax, establishing a billion-dollar budget."

I call on you to tell the farmers of Georgia how you propose to keep the price of cotton, corn, tobacco, peanuts, hogs, cattle and other farm commodities from going to the levels of 1933 if you carry out your promise to stop the benefit checks and repeal the laws which I helped enact, which have increased the prices of those commodities."

Governmental Services.

4. The principal plank in your printed platform is to repeal the federal income tax, and reduce the budget to one billion dollars annually."

You know that it costs more than one billion dollars per year to maintain an army and navy for national defense, and your plan would stop all other governmental activities."

Please explain how it will benefit Georgia to stop all benefit checks to farmers, cut off the compensation of every ex-service man, close the veterans' hospitals, stop federal funds for schools and highways, disrupt the R. R. D. system of delivering mails to farmers, close the CCC camps, stop all government loans to farmers, abolish the rural electrification program, and immediately stop all public works projects, all of which will result if your platform should be carried out."

I ask you to take the people of Georgia into your confidence and tell them just exactly how you propose to spend the billion dollars, after the income tax is repealed, and what governmental services you propose to eliminate and those you propose to retain."

Road Allotments.

5. The ninth plank in your McRae platform promises to see that federal money for highways is distributed solely on the basis of population."

This would have reduced Georgia's allotment since the recovery act from $31,426,055 to $20,944,553, and at the same time would have increased Connecticut's allotment from $9,034,914 to $16,040,635, and would have increased New York's from $70,588,255 to $125,705,215."

Why do you feel it is wise to reduce Georgia's allotment for highways to nearly two and a half millions dollars and other agricultural states in proportion for the purpose of making tremendous increases in highway allotments to the wealthy industrial states of the east, who do not actually need the money?

Last year Georgia received from the federal treasury over sixty-six million dollars and paid in less than one-fifth of that amount."

Why do you think it is good business to stop stepping one dollar for more than five?

Refutes Bonus Charge.

6. You have made the flat charge that I voted against the McRae platform, of the adjusted service certificates of the ex-soldiers, commonly called the bonus."

I leave here photographs from the Congressional Record showing that I voted in favor of this proposition every time it was before the senate, and I demand that you either prove the charges made in your Cartersville speech, or that you retract this false statement."

CCC Charges.

7. You bitterly deny ever having called the boys in the CCC camps "bums and loafers."

Who took advantage of you by writing the article under your name in the Statesman of June 24, 1933, referring to these boys as "bums and loafers," and why did you wait so late to deny an article appearing in your own personal newspaper under your own name?

Old Age Pensions.

8. In your efforts to explain your opposition to the payment of any old age pensions in Georgia, you have stated that farmers cannot draw old age pensions."

I have here actual photographs of telegrams showing that farmers are drawing this help in all states which are co-operating with the federal government, as well as a copy of the bill. I call on you not to try to confuse the people by referring to title 2 of this act, which affects only industrial and commercial employees in setting up a retirement fund for them, and to point out where in title 1, which provides for old-age pensions, there is no prohibition on farmers drawing old-age pensions."

Pauper's Oath.

9. You have repeatedly charged that a pauper's oath was necessary to draw an old-age pension."

HARRISON AND BYRNES INCREASE MAJORITIES

accounted for the vote was: Malon 17,952; Bryson 16,545; Leatherwood 13,922; Taylor 12,598.

In other districts, the results were: Second, 237 of 244 precincts, Representative Hampton P. Fulmer, 28,401; Gray Baschal, Columbia attorney, 17,081.

Third, 316 precincts complete, Representative John C. Taylor, 30,457; J. Wade Drake, Anderson farmer, 15,133.

Sixth, 219 of 237 precincts, Representative A. H. Gasque, 21,618; James R. Turner, of Bennettsville, 13,077; Dr. R. G. Blackburn, of Marion, 1,610.

Representatives Thomas S. McMillan, in the first district, and J. P. Richards, in the fifth, were without opposition.

Returns from the legislative contests indicated Governor Johnston had increased his strength in the house but had failed to weaken the anti-Johnson bloc in the senate, which last session balked his plans for reorganizing the state highway department.

HARRISON'S MAJORITY IS ABOVE 63,000
JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Renominated to the senate by a majority that surprised even himself, Senator Pat Harrison prepared to receive the plaudits of his followers here Thursday night before again turning his attention to national politics.

With only 35 small precincts missing from the state's total of 1,680, Senator Harrison increased his overwhelming lead over former Governor Bennett Conner in yesterday's primary election to 63,116 votes.

Stumping the state on a platform of New Deal loyalty, Senator Harrison swept every county with the exception of two despite the combined opposition of Conner and Harrison's senate colleague, Theodore G. Bilbo.

Mississippi democrats also signified by their ballots that they are satisfied with their representation in the lower house of congress.

All six of the state's delegation of seven congressmen who offered for reelection will go back to their posts in Washington. With them returns Ross A. Collins, of Meridian, former congressman from the fifth district, who relinquished his seat to make an unsuccessful race for the senate two years ago.

Even Collins, however, did not defeat an incumbent, as Congressman Aubert Dunn did not offer for reelection.

In only one of the congressional races was the vote close. Representative Dan McGhee, of the seventh district, held only a 437-vote lead over Russell Ellzey, of Wesson, but returns were in from all save 5 of the precincts in the district and it was not believed the result could be changed.

TOWNSENDITES ELATED AT CALIFORNIA SHOWING
SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 26.—(AP)—Elated Townsendites leaders moved tonight to put their campaigning strength behind at least 11 of their indorsees who won nominations in yesterday's congressional primary.

Although in-dorsement returns showed the Townsend-indebted candidates polled a smaller aggregate vote than their combined opponents, E. J. Margrett, state manager for the pension group, predicted his forces would elect 17 representatives out of the 20 districts next November.

The aggregate vote, with the 10 northern California districts almost complete and the 10 southern districts roughly half counted showed an overall vote of 285,933 ballots for the Townsendites and 340,418 for their opponents.

Representative John H. Hoepfel, democrat under sentence for allegedly conspiring to sell a West Point appointment, was defeated in the 12th district despite the fact that he ran far ahead of the Townsend contender, William R. Peeler. H. J. Voorhis, a teacher, won the democratic nomination.

The Townsendites suffered a major casualty in the defeat of Sheridan Downer, who ran against Representative Frank H. Buck for the third district of opportunity to the youth of America, just as certainly as a staggering private debt. We must face the issue squarely.

The pension group indorsed eight of the representatives who apparently survived the primaries. They were Harry L. Englebright, second district; Richard J. Welch, fifth; Albert E. Carter, sixth, and B. W. Gearhart, ninth, all republicans, and Democrats J. H. Tolson, seventh; J. J. McGrath, eighth; Henry E. Stubbs, tenth, and Charles Kramer, 13th.

Among the non-Townsendite representatives renominated were Clarence F. Lea, democrat in the first district who failed to keep Townsendite Nelson V. Matre from winning the republican nomination in the first district.

Text of Address by Governor Landon

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Governor Alf M. Landon's address follows in full:

TAXATION.

Tonight I want to talk about the financial problems of our federal government and their effect upon us as individuals. In other words, I'm going to talk about our government as a spender of part of the money we work so hard to earn. This is a proper approach to the question, in my judgment, because the government has no money except the money it gets from us.

There are some people who seem to believe that the government can create money. That is not true. All it can create are promises to pay money. This is what it does when it issues paper money or sells bonds. In principle, this is similar to what we do when we open a charge account at a store. We get something now and promise to pay for it later. The store is the same as the government. It can pay for our promises to pay for it later. The same is true of government.

So, if we are to be realistic in our thinking about government finance, we must think of the government as almost a member of our family—a member to whom day by day, week by week, year by year, we must give part of what we receive in our pay envelope or part of the crops we raise. We must remember that every time the government spends a dollar, that dollar will have to be paid by us or we must pass the debt on to our children.

Now, what are these principles? The government must guard and preserve its source of income. The government must make sure that it gets a dollar's worth for every dollar it spends.

The government must not get in the habit of spending more than it receives. Finally, the government must prepare for the rainy day.

These, in brief, are the four great principles which a prudent, foresighted head of a family follows in the handling of his own finances. They are the same four great principles which a prudent, foresighted government must follow if it is to meet the financial demands made upon it by an increasingly complex civilization.

TAXES MUST BE LEVIED ON ABILITY TO PAY
Now let us examine each of the four principles in turn:

The first is the question of guarding and preserving the source of income. Fundamentally, this is a question of the fairness of the kind of taxes that are levied. Are the taxes levied according to our ability to pay, or are they indirect taxes levied without regard to our ability to contribute to the support of the government?

It has always been my belief that the government should raise the major portion of its revenue from direct taxes levied on the net income of individuals and corporations. When this is done everyone pays for his fair share and knows just how much the government is costing him for legislation in Kansas to prevent concealment of the cost of government. On the other hand, if the major portion of the government's income is obtained from indirect and hidden taxes—taxes upon such things as food, clothing, gasoline and cigars—then the main burden falls upon those of small income and the cost of government is hidden.

In this case, it is the wage earner, the farmer, the farmer, and the small businessman, who have to pay most of the bill. Now, let us turn to the record and see just what the cost of our government is.

What do the figures of the Treasury Department show? They show that in the year 1932, 30 cents out of every dollar collected by our federal government, was secured from direct taxes. The other 41 cents was collected from indirect and hidden taxes, paid for the most part, by people with incomes of $25 a week or less.

COST OF GOVERNMENT SHOWN IN MARKET BASKET
That was for 1932. Four years later what do we find? We find that 51 cents out of every dollar collected by the federal government came from hidden taxes. In other words, the share of the cost of government falling mainly on those with incomes of $25 a week or less has increased 25 per cent during the three years of the present administration. They are paying far more than their right share of the cost of government.

Any housewife can tell you this, because the housewife knows, better than anybody else, how the mounting cost of living is curtailing the comforts of the home. And you cannot long fool her with the pretense that only the rich will pay.

This increase has come despite the fact that the tax rates on incomes of individuals and corporations have been raised. It has come despite the fact that they are paying far more actual money into the treasury than they did in 1932. In other words, the larger payments by well-to-do individuals and corporations have not been enough to cover the waste and extravagance of this administration.

What is the result? Those of our citizens with small incomes have had to pay an increased proportion of the cost of the federal government.

And just how have those with small incomes paid more? When we consider the government as a whole—federal, state and local—we find that they have paid in a thousand different ways. Take bread for example. When we buy a loaf of bread for 10 cents we pay 8 cents for the bread. The other two cents goes for taxes. If we smoke a package of cigarettes a day we pay $22 a year in taxes. So it is in all our spending.

We cannot buy a stitch of clothing without the government's taking in taxes a part of the money we pay out. We cannot buy an ounce of food at a grocery store without being taxed to support the government. We cannot go to a movie, or to a baseball game, or ride in an automobile without this invisible tax arm of government reaching out and taking a part of the money we spend. This has been a growing tendency of government in recent years.

EVERY TAX DOLLAR CUTS FAMILY BUDGET
Most of these taxes, it is true, are hidden so deeply that we cannot see them. But the taxes are there just as truly as they are in the sales tax on gasoline. They cost just as much, and are just as real, as they would be if they were taken right out of our pay envelopes. These hidden taxes—federal, state and local—amount to about 20 cents out of every dollar we spend. In the case of the federal government alone they amount to over $5 a month for every family.

It is in this way that the government's financial policy affects us as individuals. The more the government wastes, the more money it has to take from us. The more it takes from us the less food and clothing we can buy for ourselves. The less we have for the education of our children and the less we have left to set aside for meeting emergencies—for the rainy day.

There is no better illustration of this than the so-called surplus tax bill brought through congress this spring.

One practical effect of this tax law is to prevent a corporation from using its earnings in the business. It must pay them out in dividends. In consequence, earnings no longer provide funds for making new equipment, for replacing out-of-date equipment, and for additions to the plant.

What does this mean to a man like me? It means less chance of finding work. There will not be those jobs that come from the gradual growth of our small businesses, from the replacement of equipment, and from plant expansion.

For those workers who already have jobs the effect of tax law is just as bad. Because of this legislation it is no longer possible for a business, except at unbearable cost, to build up a reserve for meeting future losses. In other words, a business, or organization, unless it already has reserves, is put on a hand-to-mouth basis. This means that it can exist only so long as it can make a profit, it is lost. Not having a reserve to fall back upon, its lot is bankruptcy, and the lot of the workers is unemployment.

REPEATED PROMISES BUT NO BUDGET ACTION
It watches every dollar it spends to be sure that it uses in the way which will do the most good. It borrows no more than is absolutely necessary, for it knows that if we exhaust our borrowing capacity today, our children will be helpless should they be called on to face an emergency.

In my judgment these are the common sense principles that our federal government should follow. Unfortunately, they are not the principles which have been followed by the present administration.

In spite of the repeated assurances about a balanced budget—in October, 1932, after the banking holiday in 1933, in January, 1934, in January, 1935, and in January, 1936—what has happened?

The administration has continued to increase expenditures, even for the regular departments, and carry us deeper and deeper into debt. The latest assurance volunteered only 13 days ago, repeats the old story—"business is improving, revenue increasing, no new taxes will be necessary to balance the budget." How can anyone really believe this, in the face of the record of the present administration?

It has piled deficit upon deficit. It has increased our public debt until the total is equal to two-thirds of the annual income of every man, woman and child in the United States.

It has created an atmosphere of spendthrift generosity that has made it impossible for it to restore economy in government expenditures.

It has acted as if it were willing to give the whole treasury away, trying to enrich everybody by impoverishing everybody else.

The time has come to put an end to these policies. We must establish a system of simple, honest bookkeeping. We must return to the principles which we follow in the handling of our own finances.

This will give us a government able to meet every reasonable demand made upon it; a government fully prepared to assume its increasing financial responsibilities; a government that will leave our children a fair chance to solve the problems that arise in their time.

That is the kind of government we must have if we are to get rid of unemployment by giving our workers real jobs at good pay. I know that accomplishing all this is not a task that can be completed overnight, and I make no such promise. We have huge responsibilities that we must continue to meet. But with the help of a courageous country it is a task that can and will be done.

That is my pledge to the American people.

TRIAL EXCESSES SCORED BY BAR ASSOCIATION

The report termed Governor Hoffman's activities particularly repugnant because he was also a member of New Jersey's court of pardons, which twice considered appeals of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for commutation of his death sentence for murdering the infant son of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

Governor Hoffman's visit to Hauptmann in prison and what the committee called his "insinuations" that evidence was framed were criticized in the report.

The report assailed Dr. Condon, aged intermediary in the Lindbergh kidnapping, for writing his magazine articles while the fate of Hauptmann was still undecided.

The committee approved Judge Thomas W. Trenchard's conduct of the trial and offered 16 recommendations designed to reform courtroom procedure.

One of the suggestions would forbid the use of cameras in the courtroom, another the use of radio, and a third would prohibit "vaudeville appearances" by jurors after trials.

The report was signed by Hallam, Albert J. Harmon, Urbana, Ill.; Charles P. Taft II, Cincinnati, Ohio, and John Kirkland Clark, New York.

Delegates to the bar association's 30th annual meeting, after a day which nearly brought a rift among the membership over the Hallam report on the Hauptmann trial, heard two foreign guests speak tonight on non-controversial historical subjects.

Introduced by Homer S. Cummings, attorney general of the United States, Justice Henry Hanna, judge of the high court of the Irish Free State, was the principal speaker. His subject was "The Bench and Bar of Ireland in the Nineteenth Century."

But in due time the day of reckoning must come. Someone, sometime, will have to pay the bill. How is it that the government has been able to follow such a will-o-the-wisp financial policy? It is because the public has not been properly informed.

We have been told that all this extravagance will be paid for by "soaking the rich." This is not possible. The figures of our treasury department show that if we confiscated all incomes in excess of $5,000 a year, it would not be enough to pay for the cost of our federal government.

Do not think that we have been getting something for nothing as the result of the huge government spending of the past three years. Some of the debt, it is true, has been shifted to the wealthy, but the major portion of the debt, both the principal and the interest, is being charged up against ourselves and our children.

There is no other group to whom we can shift the burden and it is a burden that gets heavier and heavier every day that the present wasteful policies of the administration are continued.

The final principle the government must follow, is to prepare for the rainy day. In our own families we recognize the need for saving, doing this and we try to build up individual reserves.

In the case of the government the equivalent of these reserves is the ability to borrow. It protects this ability by keeping its financial house in the best possible order.

How does it do this? In periods of good times, the government pays off its debts, so that if necessary it will be able to borrow again. It keeps its books so that it can see where there will be a reserve of tax-paying ability that can be called upon to meet emergencies. It permits its citizens to prosper so that they can contribute to the government for aid at the first breath of ill wind. These are the policies to be followed in good times.

In bad times, certain changes become necessary. But a financially responsible administration never loses sight of the fact that it acts at all times as a trustee of the people.

How can anyone really believe this, in the face of the record of the present administration?

It has piled deficit upon deficit. It has increased our public debt until the total is equal to two-thirds of the annual income of every man, woman and child in the United States.

It has created an atmosphere of spendthrift generosity that has made it impossible for it to restore economy in government expenditures.

It has acted as if it were willing to give the whole treasury away, trying to enrich everybody by impoverishing everybody else.

The time has come to put an end to these policies. We must establish a system of simple, honest bookkeeping. We must return to the principles which we follow in the handling of our own finances.

This will give us a government able to meet every reasonable demand made upon it; a government fully prepared to assume its increasing financial responsibilities; a government that will leave our children a fair chance to solve the problems that arise in their time.

That is the kind of government we must have if we are to get rid of unemployment by giving our workers real jobs at good pay. I know that accomplishing all this is not a task that can be completed overnight, and I make no such promise. We have huge responsibilities that we must continue to meet. But with the help of a courageous country it is a task that can and will be done.

That is my pledge to the American people.

TRIAL EXCESSES SCORED BY BAR ASSOCIATION

The report termed Governor Hoffman's activities particularly repugnant because he was also a member of New Jersey's court of pardons, which twice considered appeals of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for commutation of his death sentence for murdering the infant son of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

Governor Hoffman's visit to Hauptmann in prison and what the committee called his "insinuations" that evidence was framed were criticized in the report.

The report assailed Dr. Condon, aged intermediary in the Lindbergh kidnapping, for writing his magazine articles while the fate of Hauptmann was still undecided.

The committee approved Judge Thomas W. Trenchard's conduct of the trial and offered 16 recommendations designed to reform courtroom procedure.

One of the suggestions would forbid the use of cameras in the courtroom, another the use of radio, and a third would prohibit "vaudeville appearances" by jurors after trials.

The report was signed by Hallam, Albert J. Harmon, Urbana, Ill.; Charles P. Taft II, Cincinnati, Ohio, and John Kirkland Clark, New York.

Delegates to the bar association's 30th annual meeting, after a day which nearly brought a rift among the membership over the Hallam report on the Hauptmann trial, heard two foreign guests speak tonight on non-controversial historical subjects.

But in due time the day of reckoning must come. Someone, sometime, will have to pay the bill. How is it that the government has been able to follow such a will-o-the-wisp financial policy? It is because the public has not been properly informed.

We have been told that all this extravagance will be paid for by "soaking the rich." This is not possible. The figures of our treasury department show that if we confiscated all incomes in excess of $5,000 a year, it would not be enough to pay for the cost of our federal government.

Do not think that we have been getting something for nothing as the result of the huge government spending of the past three years. Some of the debt, it is true, has been shifted to the wealthy, but the major portion of the debt, both the principal and the interest, is being charged up against ourselves and our children.

There is no other group to whom we can shift the burden and it is a burden that gets heavier and heavier every day that the present wasteful policies of the administration are continued.

The final principle the government must follow, is to prepare for the rainy day. In our own families we recognize the need for saving, doing this and we try to build up individual reserves.

In the case of the government the equivalent of these reserves is the ability to borrow. It protects this ability by keeping its financial house in the best possible order.

How does it do this? In periods of good times, the government pays off its debts, so that if necessary it will be able to borrow again. It keeps its books so that it can see where there will be a reserve of tax-paying ability that can be called upon to meet emergencies. It permits its citizens to prosper so that they can contribute to the government for aid at the first breath of ill wind. These are the policies to be followed in good times.

In bad times, certain changes become necessary. But a financially responsible administration never loses sight of the fact that it acts at all times as a trustee of the people.

REPEATED PROMISES BUT NO BUDGET ACTION
It watches every dollar it spends to be sure that it uses in the way which will do the most good. It borrows no more than is absolutely necessary, for it knows that if we exhaust our borrowing capacity today, our children will be helpless should they be called on to face an emergency.

In my judgment these are the common sense principles that our federal government should follow. Unfortunately, they are not the principles which have been followed by the present administration.

In spite of the repeated assurances about a balanced budget—in October, 1932, after the banking holiday in 1933, in January, 1934, in January, 1935, and in January, 1936—what has happened?

The administration has continued to increase expenditures, even for the regular departments, and carry us deeper and deeper into debt. The latest assurance volunteered only 13 days ago, repeats the old story—"business is improving, revenue increasing, no new taxes will be necessary to balance the budget." How can anyone really believe this, in the face of the record of the present administration?

It has piled deficit upon deficit. It has increased our public debt until the total is equal to two-thirds of the annual income of every man, woman and child in the United States.

It has created an atmosphere of spendthrift generosity that has made it impossible for it to restore economy in government expenditures.

WAR SECRETARY DERN HAS 'RESTLESS NIGHT'

Noted European Heart Specialist Visits Cabinet Member at F. D. R. Request.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—(AP)—While Secretary of War Dorn still fought doggedly for life at Walter Reed hospital tonight a noted European heart specialist was called into consultation with army physicians at the request of President Roosevelt.

Dr. Fritz Meyer, a well known Berlin specialist now practicing in New York, rushed by plane from Boston this morning to add his ability and experience to that of the army doctors.

After visiting the hospital Dr. Meyer said Secretary Dorn was in a "critical condition" but that everything possible was being done by the physicians in attendance. He will confer with army doctors again tomorrow morning before returning to Boston.

The official War Department bulletin on Dorn's condition today, reported he was in a "semi-conscious condition" after having spent a "restless night."

Condition About Same.

"While some improvement is shown in that there is less congestion in the lungs and less edema," the bulletin said, "his general physical condition remains about the same."

Dorn entered the hospital six weeks ago with influenza which has since become complicated with heart and kidney trouble.

Hospital authorities said tonight there had been little change in his condition through the day and still held out hopes that he might rally.

Dr. Meyer was recommended to the President by William C. Bullitt, newly named ambassador to France, as one of the outstanding heart specialists in Europe, who had recently become consultant to Sea View and other New York hospitals.

Wishes of President.

The German physician, then practicing in Berlin, was credited with saving the life of Edward A. Filene, noted Boston merchant, when he was stricken with heart trouble a year ago on a visit to Moscow. Bullitt was ambassador to the Soviet Union and arranged for him to be treated by Dr. Meyer.

Acting on the President's wishes to have everything possible done, Bullitt arranged to have Dr. Meyer fly here early today from Boston, where he was spending a vacation with Lincoln Filene.

Dr. Meyer paid high compliment to the army hospital authorities after his visit to Dorn's bedside.

"The staff at Walter Reed hospital," he said, "is doing everything possible for Mr. Dorn, and there is nothing I can suggest concerning his treatment."

REHABILITATION FUNDS USED AS DROUTH AID

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Regional Director E. Roy Reid said today that lack of funds will prohibit addition of new families to the rural rehabilitation program of the Resettlement Administration in the sixth region.

Money appropriated by congress for use by the RA in its rehabilitation program has been set aside for emergency drouth relief, he said, adding that "the immediate effect upon rehabilitation is that no new clients can be added to the program, at least not until January."

Reid said that there will be funds available for supplemental loans to families already on the program and for grants to destitute farmers in counties affected by drouth in Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi, the states comprising the RA's sixth region.

County supervisors in the three states now are beginning collection of approximately $10,000,000 lent to 35,000 farmers to make this year's crops.

Discarded Paper Here Would Feed Thousands

Paper destroyed daily in Atlanta would, if collected and sold, yield sufficient revenue to feed and clothe thousands during the winter months, Brigadier W. H. Range, of the Salvation Army, declared yesterday.

Lives are being sustained in Atlanta by means of nothing more substantial than old magazines and newspapers, which are sold for food, he said in describing means by which the Salvation Army takes care of many temporary dependents each week.

"Old paper can be made to represent food, clothing, shelter and independence," he declared. "Hundreds of wayfarers are given temporary employment collecting, sorting and hauling papers. These men are given food, shelter and a small weekly wage. Many stay to work around the city, if the opportunity presents itself, but most of them move on."

"The Salvation Army specializes in the conversion of men and waste material," he continued, "and there is literally nothing that we cannot turn to good use. Our primary object is to rebuild men and in the process these men rebuild old shoes, furniture and household goods of every description."

He asked that the public save everything that they might throw away and give it to the Salvation Army. Persons having waste paper and so forth have been asked to call the Salvation Army headquarters.

ARMY AIR CORPS CHIEF INSPECTS FIELD HERE

Major Gen. Westover Tells of Trend Toward Bomber Planes.

Major General Oscar Westover, chief of the United States army air corps, was in Atlanta yesterday to inspect the army reserve air field at Candler field. He is on the final lap of an inspection tour of all the army air depots and aircraft factories which contract to build army air equipment.

"The swing in the army air corps today is toward bombing equipment," General Westover said. "At the close of the World War the ratio of bombers was 21 per cent as compared to all of our fighting aircraft. Today it is on a ratio of 46 per cent bombers and 54 per cent pursuit and observation."

Bombing equipment is more expensive than other types of fighting aircraft, the general said, "which explains," he added, "why many of the recent appropriations for the air corps have not purchased the number of aircraft similar appropriations purchased when spent for pursuit and observation planes."

General Westover commended Major John B. Patrick, officer in charge of the reserve field at Candler field. He said the reserve flying activities here are being conducted in a thorough way and that needed planes will be sent to the Atlanta reserve field soon.

General Westover was entertained at a luncheon at the Capital City Club yesterday by Major General George Van Horn Moseley, commander of the fourth corps area. After the luncheon he left by plane for Fort Bragg, N. C., to inspect the air there.

10 INJURED IN RIOT IN MEXICAN SENATE

MEXICO CITY, D. F., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Ten persons were injured tonight as chairs, fists and pistol bolts flew in a riot in the senate chambers. Factions battled when a left wing bloc of senators met to vote their own dissolution. Fifty police reserves were called to restore order and to eject the trouble makers.

Battle lines were drawn between supporters of Abraham Mejia, senatorial candidate for Michoacan, supported by members of the senate, and popular front, and partisans of Jose Maria Davila, candidate from the federal district.

A secret session of the chamber of deputies, it was learned reliably, previously accepted President Lazaro Cardenas' request to dissolve left wing blocs which had supported him.

RE-ELECT City Treasurer HENRY B. KENNEDY

He Has Served Atlanta Well for Six Years

Henry B. Kennedy, Treasurer of the city of Atlanta, is a candidate to succeed himself for this very important city office.

He has been prominently identified with Atlanta's financial and civic affairs for forty years.

He has served two terms as Treasurer of the Board of Education, was a member of the 1926 Bond Commission, was Chairman of the Board of Public Works and also served as Fuel Administrator during the war.

As City Treasurer, Henry B. Kennedy is a member of the Board of Trustees for the Relief and Pension Fund of the Atlanta Fire Department; likewise the General Employees' Pension Fund. He is ex-officio member of the Board of Trustees of the Employees' Group Life Insurance Fund.

City Treasurer Henry B. Kennedy, as his record shows, is ideally qualified by experience with the city's financial affairs to serve Atlanta well in this important capacity, which now, particularly, calls for experience in local and financial matters.

Atlanta should re-elect City Treasurer Henry B. Kennedy for this important post and continue this office in the hands of a man who has served his community well.

On Wednesday, September 2, cast your vote to re-elect Henry B. Kennedy for Treasurer of the City of Atlanta.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking acids and wastes out of the blood. A healthy person should pass about 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, waste stays in the body and may become poisonous. It may start nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Don't let it lay you up.

Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

Official Tribute Paid Army Reserve Fliers

Jump of 140,000 in Registration Shows Gain in Political Interest

(Copyright, 1936, by Associated Press.)

Over half a million Georgians, a record, are qualified to vote in the democratic primary of September 9 which will decide whether Senator Richard B. Russell Jr., New Deal advocate, or Governor Talmadge, New Deal critic, will be nominated for United States Senate.

The registration shows a jump of 140,000 over two years ago and over 30,000 over four years ago.

Figures compiled by the Associated Press show that 515,379 voters are registered for the democratic primary this year in the 159 counties of the state. This compares with 370,100 two years ago, and 458,007 in 1932.

The Georgia law requires the county unit system to be used in primaries. Under this each county is assigned a set number of units. A majority of unit votes is necessary to nominate a senator and governor.

Each county is allotted twice as many units as it has members in the state house of representatives. There are 410 units in the state.

The eight most populous counties have six units each; the next 30 four units each, and the rest of the 159 counties have two units each.

Talmadge and Russell are carrying on vigorous speaking campaigns and are the three candidates for the gubernatorial nomination.

Russell is vigorously upholding President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal.

Talmadge is equally as vigorous in criticizing the New Deal. He says his fight is within the democratic party.

Gubernatorial Race.

Talmadge is supporting Charles D. Redwine, president of the state senate, for governor.

E. D. Rivers, speaker of the house, and Judge Blanton Fortson also are seeking the gubernatorial nomination. Both are praising President Roosevelt and the New Deal.

Nearly all counties show an increase in registration. The leader is Fulton, of which Atlanta is the county seat. The registration in Fulton this year is 47,283. Two years ago it was 30,895.

If only two candidates are running, the one getting a majority of the popular votes receives the unit votes thereof. If two or more are running, the candidate receiving a plurality of the popular vote captures the county unit vote.

Appling 2,800, Atkinson 1,275, Bacon 1,992, Baker 2,505, Baldwin 1,693, Banks 2,200, Barrow 2,285, Bartow 4,855, Bibb 1,536, Berrien 3,364, Blount 10,258, Bleckley 1,571, Brantley 1,209, Brooks 1,535, Bryan 1,740, Bulloch 5,000, Burke 1,728, Butts 1,723, Calhoun 1,400, Camden 1,060, Candler 2,140, Carroll 5,722, Catatos 2,225, Charlton 998, Chatham 14,137, Chattahoochee 432.

Six and Four Unit Counties.

The eight counties having six unit votes each are Bibb, Chatham, Elbert, Kalb, Floyd, Fulton, Muscogee, Richmond and Troup.

QUERIES BY RUSSELL MEET DEAD SILENCE

The 30 counties having four unit votes each are Baldwin, Bartow, Brooks, Bulloch, Burke, Carroll, Clarke, Cobb, Colquitt, Coweta, DeKalb, Dodge, Dougherty, Emanuel, Gwinnett, Hall, Jackson, Laurens, Lowndes, Meriwether, Mitchell, Polk, Spalding, Sumter, Thomas, Walker, Walton, Ware, Washington and Worth.

All of the others have two unit votes each.

The ladies of Georgia had been insulted by Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor, who some years ago was quoted as saying people in the south did not wear shoes.

Miss Perkins declared she had been misled. She said she had been misled by the Georgia ladies' association, which she said she had been misled by.

Continuing on the subject of the secretary of labor, the Governor declared that Miss Perkins was really Mrs. Paul Wilson. He said she had never been divorced and had one child.

Important New Plan.

Spreading his arms again, the Governor said:

"Ah, my countrymen, the junior senator voted to confirm her for her post under her maiden name despite the fact she is married."

This seemed to be one of his important new plans and a reason why he believed he should be elected to the United States senate.

He said he was a democrat, "I have always been a democrat," said the Governor.

He made no effort to reply to Senator Russell's query as to how he explained going to Lincoln's tomb to berate the democratic party and to pray for another Lincoln in the White House.

Democratic County.

He further said that his county always had gone democratic and that Senator Russell's her not. He repeated that he wore his party as a badge and not as a chain.

"How many of you had to pay $30 to have your cotton ginned?" he yelled.

Some hands went up.

"You know who got that off, don't you?" he asked.

It was at this point that he claimed he told the President of the United States what to do from the hook-up of the grass roots convention, paid for and managed by men now in the employ of Alf Landon, and claimed the President obeyed him in less than a week.

He was heckled and booed by a part of the crowd.

"Ah, you don't want to hear about it, you fellows over there," he said.

Reads Russell Letter.

"The junior senator says it's a dead mule. I want to tell you about it. He read a letter from a farmer named Wagers, who, he said, had received the letter from Senator Russell. In it the senator said that a bill was being prepared to return the processing taxes to the farmers but had not been introduced because it was, at the time of the writing, awaiting the approval of the Department of Agriculture."

The crowd waited because this seemed a perfectly proper reply but the Governor shouted:

"He was waiting until that board ruled by that republican Wallace would approve it before he would introduce it."

Sensor Russell had left a question for the Governor to answer on this but he ignored it as he did the others. Senator Russell has produced congressional records to prove the processing taxes had nothing at all to do with the gin taxes but were a tax on the mills.

Repeats Statements.

Governor Talmadge continued with his same statements, claiming that Georgia did not get back as much as was paid in to the government. This is explained by Senator Russell's government figures showing that states without cotton farmers got back nothing at all, the tax being determined by the number of cotton spindles.

"Now, I know you don't want to hear about it," he shouted at a group which had booed him. He won't answer it. I am because he robbed the farmers of Georgia."

this morning in New York that the chief executive was giving some study to the possibility of proposing such a parity to heads of other nations if he were re-elected.

The secretary said that after the reports were described to him the President said there had been no conversations of any sort with reference to such a conference.

Wallace said he interpreted "conversations" to mean "feelers thrown out by the State Department," and added that personally he considered the reports that the President was considering an international peace meeting "utterly incredible."

Makes Chicago Stop.

The presidential special stopped in Chicago for 36 minutes, reaching the Western avenue coach yards of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific railroad at 4:49 p. m. Atlanta time. There it took on seven tons of ice for its cooling system and the entire train was given a bath with a hose and brushes.

President Roosevelt did not appear on the rear platform, but from his seat inside, where he was engaged in reading telegrams and correspondence, he waved several times at a crowd which gathered to greet him.

Several newspapermen joined the party in Chicago and Mrs. Elizabeth H. Russell, head of the Chicago office of the Federal Narcotics Bureau, came aboard "to pay a friendly call." She said she assured the President Illinois would be in the democratic column in November.

At the President's telegraphed request, a special telephone was strung out to the coach yards to enable him to make a long-distance call to Washington. The equipment was not used, however, because of a change in arrangements.

Hudson River Farmer.

As the train left Chicago, bound for Milwaukee, for the first time on his inspection tour the President carried with him a place of a state in which 21 counties have been designated emergency drought areas.

Leaving Illinois, his train carried him tonight into Wisconsin and Minnesota on the way to Bismarck and the actual start of his personal survey of the drought-ravaged farm lands.

Standing on the rear platform of the "Eagles" his private car, with Governor Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, by his side, the President waved to a crowd at Garrett and remarked:

"I am going out, as you know, farther west and up into the northwest to see some of the worst of the drought conditions."

"I must say this, as a Hudson river farmer, that I have been looking at the corn in Indiana today and I think our corn on the Hudson river is a little better than yours this year—but this year only, because generally you raise better corn than we do."

A corn field borders the road entering Mr. Roosevelt's estate at Hyde Park, N. Y.

McNutt Joins Party.

"I am, of course," the President added, "very much disturbed about those parts of the country that have had practically a total crop failure, and that is why I am going out to look at it and get information at first hand."

Governor McNutt boarded the special train at Garrett and rode across Indiana to Gary with the presidential party. On the way, he and Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, talked over drought conditions and remedies with the President.

Governor McNutt is to be host at a formal drought conference in which the President will participate at Indianapolis September 4, along with Governor Chandler, of Kentucky, and Fitzgerald, of Michigan.

Other conferences with governors, senators and state and federal officials have been arranged for Bismarck tomorrow and later for Pierre, S. D.; St. Paul, Minn.; La Crosse, Wis.; Des Moines, Iowa, and Springfield, Ill.

At the statehouse in Des Moines, Mr. Roosevelt will sit down to lunch, and then to a conference with Governor Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, republican presidential nominee, and the chief executives of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri.

Hot, Cloudy Weather Will Continue Today.

Another day of partly cloudy weather is on the weather map for Atlanta today, with a continuance of the 92-degree temperatures of the last several days.

No rain is in sight and, according to the forecasters at the Atlanta bureau, the dry, steady 92-degree weather is the only prospect for several days.

Yesterday's temperatures, according to the bureau, showed a two-degree climb over the last several days between 11 a. m. and noon, but during the afternoon the temperatures settled down and recorded the usual average.

The thermometer will start this morning at 72 degrees and yesterday it started at 74 degrees and climbed to 90.5 at the downtown weather bureau and to 92 degrees at Candler airport.

The rainstorm that developed in the middle northern states Monday has drifted on out into the Atlantic ocean via New England.

Decline Only 1 Per Cent.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—(AP)—Passenger automobile production in July showed a seasonal decline of only 1 per cent from the June output, the seventh federal reserve bank reported today, compared with an average decline of 14 per cent for the last 10 years. Production totaled 372,402, or 36 per cent higher than in July, 1935. The truck output was 68,897, or 11 per cent below June production, and 19 per cent higher than in July, 1935.

Bandit Hunt Continues.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 26.—(AP)—Hunt for four escaped bank robber convicts from Cummins prison farm turned eastward late today as penitentiary authorities sought to trace a car believed to have been used in the flight and reported to have been seen passing through west Memphis, on the Arkansas-Tennessee line.

STATE PRESERVES ITS ARCHITECTURE

Historical Records Placed in Library of Congress Collection.

Georgia's place in the permanent records of historical American architecture in the Library of Congress has been secured with a recent shipment of records of more than 100 Georgia buildings of historical and architectural interest, it was announced yesterday.

The records were sent to Washington after approval by the Georgia advisory committee of the historical American building survey. The survey is being directed in Georgia by Professor Bush-Brown, head of the department of architecture at Georgia Tech.

Copies of any part of the entire survey may be obtained by paying the cost of reproduction, it was said. The committee is still searching for records and information on buildings of the state constructed prior to 1880. Any person having such information is asked to communicate with the survey group at the aeronautical building at Georgia Tech, Henslow 2422.

Samuel Inman Cooper is chairman of the advisory group, with other members including H. C. McLaughlin, Lewis Crook, of Atlanta; Jacob Lowry, Augusta; Miss Edith Johnston, Savannah, and Mrs. Frank F. Jones, of Gray, Ga.

CITY MAPS DRIVE TO PREVENT FIRES

Losses This Year Lowest Since 1890, Parker Tells Chamber Group.

Atlantans interested in fire prevention and the protection of Atlanta's No. 1 position in the nation's record for low fire losses, have mapped an elaborate program they hope will insure the nation's top rating for the city again this year.

Fire losses here this year are the lowest since 1890, when records were first kept, Fire Chief O. J. Parker told the Chamber of Commerce's fire prevention committee. Property damage so far this year has been only $90,000, he said.

Plans have been formulated for the converting of the fire station at Spring and Carnegie way into a new headquarters of the modern type that has been urged for Atlanta. The board of firemen approved this plan at their meeting yesterday.

S. C. Noland, chairman of the committee, announced that the committee had also approved the following plans: an annual school for watchmen and janitors—to be held October 7 and 8; a campaign for a general cleaning of furnaces and other heating equipment before cold weather; removal of rubbish which might provide fire kindling; fire department inspection of furnaces in apartments and large buildings; efforts to reduce the smoke nuisance, and the prevention of trash and grass fires.

TRIPLE RAID VICTIM DRAWS LONG TERM

Singer Sentenced To Serve on Gang Three Years or $1,500 Fine.

James H. Singer, 22, who was "jailed" three times by the county police in the space of a week, entered a plea of guilty to possessing whisky yesterday in Fulton criminal court. Judge Jesse M. Wood sentenced him to serve three years in chain gang or to pay fines totaling $1,500. County officers confiscated seven cases of whisky August 13 at 710 McDonough road, nearly 300 pints August 21 at 68 Edgewood avenue, and approximately 600 pints August 22 at 908 Linnam avenue. They charged Singer with ownership of the three caches.

"Personally, I think you are not the real owner of this whisky, and that you are pleading guilty for someone else," Judge Wood told Singer yesterday.

In Fulton superior court, Robert Coreaux, 31, entered a plea of guilty to burglarizing the residence of Jesse Draper, Atlanta real estate dealer, at 3 Cherokee road, when clothing and jewelry valued at $808 were stolen. Judge G. H. Howard sentenced him to serve from three and one-half to five years.

The judge recommended that Coreaux, who had a previous record, be examined to determine if he "has the dope habit," and that he served his sentence at the state prison farm at Milledgeville.

JUST TOO BAD!

Two more republican affidavits from members of the republican executive committee of the eighth district are submitted by Judge Fortson to back the charges of the three eighth district republicans heretofore published. All of them agree that Rivers is not a man to be trusted by the republican party and it is not surprising that one who has been a thorn in their flesh for all these years should not only be distrusted, but denounced by them.

The so-called evidence answers itself, and it is no wonder that the democrats of that district are united in condemnation of the effort of republican leaders to bring discord into the democratic ranks.

It is a pity that Judge Fortson fell into the trap set for him. The reaction has been exactly contrary to that expected. His babe-in-the-woods political managers, in their desperation snapping and snarling at everything in sight, wired Chairman Farley to ask if it is true, "as reported by The Constitution," that he or Mr. Roosevelt favors any of the candidates for governor.

The Constitution made no such report. It has never doubted that both Speaker Rivers and Judge Fortson were supporters of the President, who naturally would not become involved in a contest between them. Hence Chairman Farley very properly replied to that effect.

The fact remains, however, that our Washington correspondent was not very far wrong in his statement that administration chiefs in Washington are concerned at the fact that there are two candidates for governor supporting the administration against only one administration antagonist and that it is their belief that Rivers, being far in the lead, should have the support of all democrats favoring the administration.

This is the general attitude of all those who recognize the fact that if the anti-administration candidate should carry Georgia in the September primary it would be proclaimed by the republicans in every state in the Union as a defeat of the President in his second home state.

It is not, however, our purpose to get into a controversy with Judge Fortson, whose ability we esteem and against whom not a word has been said by The Constitution further than to express regret that he has permitted himself to be caught in the republican trap set for him.

It is just too bad!

It begins to shape up as a campaign which will produce an apology so blunt that it calls for an apology.

Nothing is more stimulating in the quadrennial year than to see the political leader racing across lots to get in front of some followers.

MORE HANDWRITING ON WALL

The landslide victories of Senator Harrison in Mississippi and Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, in their contests for renomination give impressive evidence of the continued support by southern voters of the Roosevelt administration.

Coming so soon after the sweeping victory of Senator Robinson in Arkansas, and the defeat of Senator Gore in Oklahoma, whose anti-administration policies carried him to defeat after several terms in the senate, there can be no mistaking the significance of the successful campaign waged by Senators Harrison and Byrnes.

It is that the south realizes that under the Roosevelt administration it has received more recognition and more far-reaching benefits than under the last half dozen republican administrations and that every state south of the Mason and Dixon line will go solidly for the democratic ticket in the November elections.

Senators Harrison, Robinson and Byrnes are the wheel horses of the administration in the senate, and, as a result, they have been bitterly opposed by those who, for selfish reasons, have opposed the policies of the New Deal. In Mississippi and Arkansas the situation was further complicated as the result of the injection of bitter factionalism into the contests of these two able senators for renomination; but notwithstanding the opposition to both dwindled when the votes began to fall.

In every other normally democratic state in which primary contests have been held, the same result has been registered. Members of congress who have refused to co-operate with the recovery program of the administration, together with candidates who have offered in opposition to congressmen and senators who have supported the President's program, have gone down in defeat.

The same situation now exists in Georgia and it is clearly evident that the result in the primary of September 9 will be the same. The same selfish dissatisfaction and arbitrary refusal to co-operate with the democratic administration that has caused candidates in other states to offer against leaders of the democratic forces in congress have actuated Governor Talmadge in his vicious and unwarranted attacks on the President and Senator Russell, who has constructively supported the administration.

The desperation of the Talmadge forces as they see their supporters dwindling day by day is conclusive proof that Georgia, like Mississippi, South Carolina and Arkansas, is overwhelmingly behind an administration which has done so much for the south.

A PRAISEWORTHY PROJECT

Announcement that the Georgia branch of the Sons and Daughters of the Pilgrims will sponsor the planting of trees on the highway between Buckhead and Roswell should arouse general interest.

This highway is historic, a main artery of traffic from Atlanta northward, and traverses a section of unusual scenic attractiveness. It lends itself, therefore, to the highway beautification movement which is rapidly growing in every section of the country.

If the Roswell road were lined with the beautiful trees indigenous to this section, and later under them were planted the blooming shrubs in which this area abounds, it would be a traffic artery of unusual attractiveness.

A certain result from such beautification programs is an increase in the number of tourists attracted to a section.

The officers of this patriotic organization urge that contributions either of trees or money be made in order that the entire program may be completed at an early date. Certainly in such a laudable undertaking there should be hearty co-operation.

World's Window

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

The Background Of The Revolt.

A month ago the military junta of Spain, composed of the most prominent army officers and the leaders of the Jesuit party of Senor Gil Robles, decided to upset the democratic parliamentary regime which the people had voted into power by an overwhelming majority in February. The junta had made elaborate preparations for the rebellion. Under the cover of maneuvers, the generals had been building gun-emplacements around Madrid, Barcelona, Seville, San Sebastian and other leading cities. They had, bit by bit, withdrawn the artillery from the environs of the capital. They had placed huge sums of money in foreign banks. They had assured themselves the co-operation of Hitler and Mussolini.

When they failed to seize Madrid and Barcelona at a given signal on July 20, thanks to the vigilance of the citizens, the generals and their clerical allies did not hesitate to plunge the country into a murderous civil war, assassinating all who wherever they could, the members of the political parties who were loyal to the government, destroying property, sparing neither age nor sex while informing the world at every opportunity that they represented "order, decency, humanity and religion" as against "Marxist chaos, anarchy and the Jewish bankers of Amsterdam."

The people of Spain are today defending a legal, constitutionally-elected regime, which is not Marxist, but democratic, against a clique of big-time gangsters, officers who broke their oath of fealty to the republic. These Spanish generals, who pride themselves before all things on their patriotism and nationalism, have enlisted the aid of foreign mercenaries against their fatherland. They have enlisted the aid of Hitler, Mussolini, the Balearic Islands, the north of Africa and territory for naval and aerial bases on the Spanish mainland and the Azores and Melilla.

Franco Promises

Radical Treatment.

General Franco, the rebel chief, boasts that he will starve out Madrid. It is to say, in other words, that he will starve out the women and children, until the government surrenders and then deal in a final and drastic manner with the leaders. The leaders of the revolt? No, for he himself is the rebel. With the leaders of the political parties who are loyal to the government. And the world applauds!

If a communist talked that way about starving a city's population or about fusing half the population of Spain, that is to say, 10,000,000 people, a burst of indignation would sweep through the world. But it is a fascist general who speaks.

Premier Asks Non-Intervention From Outsiders.

"We ask nothing of Europe but to be left alone to deal with this rebellion against the legitimate government of Spain," said Dr. Giral, the premier, the day before yesterday when he accorded me an interview. "We are glad that there is a proposal of collective non-intervention. We only regret that it comes into the world at a time when the rebels have been amply supplied with war materials by certain foreign governments. What would Britain or France do if they offered to pay cash for all deliveries in France?"

The government of Madrid has not only to defend itself against the rebel army, it has to deal with the machinations of two powerful fascist states. It has received no aid from France, although a legal government of any country must be free in international law to purchase whatever it wants abroad and Spain offered to pay cash for all deliveries in France.

It took months before sanctions were applied against Italy, the aggressor in the Ethiopian squabble. It took less than a week to decide that France, Holland, Belgium, Russia and others to place an embargo on the shipment of war material to Spain. It took a well-to-do Frenchman who is depriving the Spanish government of the means to defend itself, but it is strange to see how the democracies of Europe are digesting their own quarrels. I called the Rhineland occupation by Hitler the tombstone of a couple of months ago. If France, under Hitler's and Mussolini's control, installs itself in Spain, it is a big nail in the coffin of French democracy.

Good Morning

BY LOUIE D. NEWTON.

HEADING HOME.

Good morning, folks, we're heading home, and we're heading home in a wonderful 12-day vacation in a wonderful state, the beautiful land of Florida. I am glad it is so near by. Georgians should go down there now and then for many good reasons. Half of the people we met in Florida said they were Georgians. We depend upon Florida for many good things, and they say down there that they depend upon Georgians for some good things.

But after all is done and said, the best part of any vacation is getting back home. I have lived in Florida for a long time. I have seen a good portion of our own country and something of other parts of the world, but with all the wonders of all these lovely places, Georgia suits me. They may have some better things, and for every such achievement I would take my hat off to them, but just the same Georgia suits me.

I saw a number of people from Georgia on vacation in Florida and after the usual greetings the very first question was "When are you going to get back to Georgia?" Every one of them was homesick. I certainly was. I always dread the idea of getting off on a vacation, but when you go through with all the privations and hardships incident to such an ordeal, you have the grand feeling that maybe it was all justified on the ground that you could more clearly understand and appreciate the everyday joys of home life.

For example, I haven't had a piece of cornbread fit to look at, much less eat, since we left home! The cornbread I have had since we left home! I have had to sit and wait like a caged animal for someone to bring me a glass of water, just enough to wet one's appetite for a real drink of water. Just wait till I can get my hands on that dear old frosted bottle of Atlanta water! And think of getting back to your own bathroom where you can put your shaving things where you can reach them and sing under your own shower! And the dogs and the chickens and the flowers and the patch, and, best of all, the friends!

Thoughtful.

"So you are shopping for an adding machine?" "Yes, poor junior has been having so much trouble with his arithmetic lesson."

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

BY PAUL MALLON.

ORGANIZATION

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—About 70,000,000 persons were of voting age at the time of the last presidential election. Only 47,000,000 went to the trouble of registering so they could vote, and only 41,000,000 actually voted. This was 62 per cent of the eligibles, the highest percentage of all time. (Only 50 per cent voted in 1920.)

What these figures emphasize to the practical politician is the necessity of organization. Political organizations get their voters registered and deliver them at the polls on election day.

The non-organization voter may have had the croup on registration day or may develop something like that on election day, but the organization voter will be at the polls, rain or shine, headache or not. In politics, organization counts.

START Chairman Farley has spent five years building what is generally believed to be the best organization in the history of American politics.

It reaches down from the White House to the policeman on the beat, just as did the old republican organizations, but it is better financed, has more direct and indirect beneficiaries on the rolls.

Chairman Hamilton took over, 60 days ago, a skeleton republican organization, only partially rebuilt. His reorganized headquarters has been functioning only for about 30 days. During that time, the vastness of the problem of organization, and the importance of it, are said to have impressed all who are working on his side.

While the democratic headquarters expanded for the campaign only by taking on people at the bottom, republican expansion at the top has developed growing pains. The result is the republicans have been having a hectic time trying to catch up in technical routine. This tells the story of the current political situation better than any poll could.

Note—As an example of democratic organization progress, a certain federal official in Washington notified the national committee here the other day that he had registered in his state and was preparing to vote. Two days later he received from the committee complete instructions of where to go and what the state laws were, how long the polls were open, what trains to catch to get there, etc.

FRIENDLINESS The announcements indicated that all President Roosevelt and Senator Glass did was to exchange knock-knocks, and that really was about all.

Afterward the caustic Virginian slipped away from the question whether he would make any speeches for Mr. Roosevelt by saying he had not been asked. The answer is, he won't be. His views vary from administration policies in so many particulars that what he would be willing to say might not be effective. A newsman observed the senator had made the best speech on either side in the 1932 campaign in defense of sound money and budget balancing. Senator Glass murmured his thanks, whereupon the newsman then asked: "Why don't you make the same speech again?"

The Virginian's response was to the effect that he did not "think they would want that speech again."

About all the New Dealers can do with Glass is to promote the appearance of personal and political friendship.

The White House meeting was arranged for that purpose. Note—All Mr. Glass would talk about later was the newsman who wrote that Glass had emphasized the word "professed" when he introduced Mr. Roosevelt as "a professed Jeffersonian democrat" at Monticello recently. Glass convinced his hearers there was nothing subtle in his choice of words, by pointing his arrowed finger outward and asking: "You wouldn't think there was anything wrong if I introduced you as a professed Christian, would you?"

FORGERY The democratic national committee is said to be willing to give a Roosevelt nominator button free to anyone who finds out who sent that telegram to Congressman Blanton and signed Chairman Farley's name.

One suspicion is that Blanton sent it to himself, or had a friend do it, as he is the only one who would benefit by a Farley indictment delivered on the day of his primary.

Another story is that someone at national headquarters sent the telegram, that the great ghost, Mr. Michelson, discovered it next day and had Farley deny it—after most of the citizens of Blanton's Texas district had voted.

The truth seems to be that the son of a democratic congressman did it as a more or less practical joke while experimenting personally with the problem of inebriation.

REPUTATION Michelson told a dinner party of friends recently accurately this way:

"If any democratic orator makes a bad speech, his friends say 'Why didn't he let Michelson write it for him?' and if anyone makes a good speech, they say, 'That was a fine speech Charley wrote for so-and-so.'"

Do Your Timepieces Run?

There is something about my entire family which is fatally inimical to clocks and watches. In more than twenty years we have never possessed a timepiece of any variety, cost or style, so well to know that we have never had one.

A few have kept approximately correct time for some months, only to later join the collection of former purchases which have been abandoned. I called the Rhineland occupation by Hitler the tombstone of a couple of months ago. If France, under Hitler's and Mussolini's control, installs itself in Spain, it is a big nail in the coffin of French democracy.

We have tried eight day clocks, electric clocks, chiming clocks and silent clocks.

There is one which was the prized possession of another home for ten years and, in all those years, it was never wrong a second away from U. S. Naval (official) time.

We acquired it by right of gift. What happened? Two weeks later it refused to run. I called the Rhineland occupation by Hitler the tombstone of a couple of months ago. If France, under Hitler's and Mussolini's control, installs itself in Spain, it is a big nail in the coffin of French democracy.

Queer Dream

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—A queer dream is keeping a file on all the plans and monetary hallucinations which have seeped through the cracks in a thousand earnest skulls in the course of the long panic, because there, my friends, would be a priceless jumble of trash and a fascinating historical record of the great confusion in which the people of the United States found themselves "way back in the nineteen-thirties. A hundred years from now or whenever the world finally does come out of the ether and the queer dreams of the present time another generation, still doing business in the same old capitalist way and passing money from hand to hand, will look over the brittle leaves of the wishful books, pamphlets and charts and marvel that such things ever emanated from the mind of man.

There is a queer dream of the present time, a sudden inspiration which struck an old horse-and-buggy physician when he looked out a window while shaving one morning and saw an old woman fumbling in a garbage can for a crust to eat. The Townsend plan was the one which would blow away the old doctor found himself in nominal charge of a huge and clamorous block of Americans but his incapacity for politics made him vicariously a king of political kidnappers. They slipped a bag over the old gentleman's head and took him around the country to deliver naive orations on the virtues of the Townsend plan. He would have dropped his bodily form and his mind would have been a stroke of luck, had he not called his name and personality all his movement and could have put the Townsend plan into the hands of Doctor Townsend? Oh, he lived quite a while but finally died, a weird political fantasy produced by the fever which was raging in the body of the American nation at the time. As the fever abated he faded and long before the country really got well he was gone.

Flaw Unseen This was a flaw which the old physician had not foreseen and could not remedy and his failure was due to the aroused resentment of the great body of orphans and half-orphans who bitterly rebelled at the burden of supporting in idle luxury the full-grown sons and daughters of the pensioners. But before it finally blew away, the old doctor found himself in nominal charge of a huge and clamorous block of Americans but his incapacity for politics made him vicariously a king of political kidnappers.

REPUBLICAN CHARGES SEEN AS AID TO RIVERS

Crawfordville Mayor Says Attack Shows Speaker Is Only Feared Candidate.

CRAWFORDVILLE, Ga., Aug. 26.—The charges made against him by leaders of the republican party are going to do much toward electing Speaker E. D. Rivers governor of Georgia, Mayor John A. Beasley, of Crawfordville, declared here this afternoon in a public address.

"The high ideals and clean methods of Speaker Rivers in this campaign are won him many friends over Georgia," Mayor Beasley declared. "The republicans would not make these charges against him were it not for the fact that he is the only democrat they fear in this race. These charges would elect him if nothing else."

Mayor Beasley was a prominent member of the Welton convention at Macon which "nominated" Judge Blanton Fortson, who hurried the charges, made by republicans at Speaker Rivers. Several days ago Mayor Beasley called on all the delegates to that convention to re-evaluate the charges against Rivers, and to elect a definite announcement showing the feelings of a majority of the delegates in a day or two.

For Longer School Terms.
A better rural school system including increasing the five-month term to seven and the seven-month term to nine, or all of the terms to nine months in Georgia, was advocated by Speaker Rivers.

"Georgia is treating its rural section unfairly," Mr. Rivers said. "It is providing state funds to operate the university system practically 12 months in the year, with summer terms for teachers included, whereas, many of the rural schools operate only five months a year and many communities are called upon to vote additional taxes to support a five or a seven-month term."

"Much of the $800,000,000 owed by Georgia communities, cities, counties and districts," continued Mr. Rivers, "is owed by local school districts. These are voted bonds with which to supplement other funds with which to build school buildings and to operate the schools a few months a year."

"Unjust State."
"It is an unjust state," said Mr. Rivers, "that pays all the expenses of the university system operating from nine to 12 months and appropriates only a stipend to the rural schools."

"It is also called to your attention that Governor Talmadge and his henchmen pushed through the last legislature a bill appropriating $1,000,000 to the university system, to be used as a building fund, and much being over and above the regular appropriation made to operate the colleges. These payments are to be at the rate of $333,000 a year for three years."

"It will also be noted that this same governor and his henchmen in the legislature, particularly in the senate, who blocked the appropriation bill, in the bill favored by them, cut the common school fund about $400,000. It was clearly shown by this act that the governor is no friend of the rural schools."

Record Speaks.
"The record stands for itself. These are the facts. Many rural communities in Georgia are now burdened with an extra tax to help pay for their schools, while the state pays the bill in full for the university system, the seat of which is located in Athens, the home town of Judge Fortson. If Judge Fortson were elected governor, he undoubtedly would continue to take care of the university system. However, if I am elected governor this condition shall be called to the attention of the legislature, and possible steps will be taken for the state to treat its rural schools just as it does its university system, that is, support them in full for long time."

"It is a misdirected course, when a state educates from the top instead of from the bottom, the A., B., C. course."

In telling of the free school book bill, Mr. Rivers said he supported it and that it should have been put into effect last fall. "The bill providing free books was passed in February of 1935," he said, "and by time the schools opened in the fall, there was enough money in the treasury to pay for free books for several grades. If Governor Talmadge had not deliberately held up the funds until he was in for something, every dime would have been paid for books for the first grades by families in Georgia as unnecessary if the law had been put into effect."

Mr. Rivers outlined other planks in his platform, explaining the old-age pensions, and said that industry was taking the youth of the land, from 10 years and up, crushing the life out of it by high pressure methods and then throwing them out by the millions reached 45 or 50 years old.

"It is practically impossible for a man 50 years old, out of work, to get a position these days, as the demand is for 'younger men.' Then who is to support this generation of men? It is the young men unless the firms who throw them out are taxed to keep them up."

Associate Urges Re-election of Solicitor to Important Office.

The office of the solicitor general is the most important one within the gift of the people of Fulton county. J. Sid Tiller, an associate of Solicitor General John A. Boykin, told a group of workers yesterday at the Labor Temple.

Paying tribute to the fearlessness and loyalty of Boykin, Tiller declared the office of solicitor general is of utmost importance to the voters because of the nature of the work done by the solicitor in enforcing law and preventing crime.

"My association with the solicitor general's office has been little more than one year and I am constantly amazed by the volume of work handled by this office," Tiller said. "Mr. Boykin is accomplishing important work. He has nothing to do with the making of laws, but it is his duty to prosecute and to do everything possible to enforce the laws. In this respect he has been most loyal."

"I plead with you to send this faithful public servant back for another term in this position and, in doing so, to aid the cause of law enforcement and help secure protection for your homes and schools."

Tiller said Boykin is the most capable and loyal of all public officials he has ever known.

ROBERTS DENOUNCES 'FALSE STATEMENTS'

Candidate Asserts He Is Champion of Higher Milk Prices.

GRiffin, Aug. 26.—Speaking here today at the homecoming rally which was addressed by numerous candidates in the impending democratic state primary, Columbus Roberts, prominent Columbus businessman and farmer, who is opposing Tom Linder for commissioner of agriculture, vigorously denounced numerous "campaign falsehoods" which he said were being circulated against his candidacy.

"They are circulating the false statement that I am seeking to hold down the price of milk," said Mr. Roberts. "I cannot think of anything more preposterous. It happens that I am one of the largest producers of milk in Georgia, if not the largest. Why should I want to hold down the price of milk? My entire farming operations are centered in the production and sale of milk. I raise numerous feed crops and use them all to feed my dairy herd. Milk is my cash crop and my only cash crop. Naturally I am interested in getting the very best price for my milk that the market will afford."

Champions Higher Prices.
"Instead of being interested in holding down the price of milk, I have fought consistently, and over a long period, to hold up the price of milk. I have devoted almost as much time and effort to raising the price of milk, paid to the producer, as I have to milk production itself."

"I was one of the organizers and am now the president of the Georgia Milk Producers' Confederation. The sole object of that organization is to get for its members a better price for their milk. It takes their milk at its plant in Atlanta, pasteurizes it, sells it and pays them every dollar collected, less only the actual cost of handling. Without the protection afforded by the Georgia Milk Producers' Confederation, which is a fine example of a successful co-operative, the milk producers would be absolutely at the mercy of the big pasteurizers."

"There is one thing in the milk situation that is holding down the price received by producers, and when I take office as commissioner of agriculture I promise to put a stop to it. I refer to the hauling into Georgia from adjoining states, of low-grade, inferior, often unclean milk, produced under sanitary conditions which are forbidden by Georgia milk laws. The concern that deal in this kind of milk haul it in here to the large consuming centers and use it to hammer down the price of Georgia milk."

"The commissioner of agriculture, under Georgia law, has authority to stop this vicious practice, and I am going to exercise that authority. So long as I hold the office of commissioner, there will be no milk hauled into Georgia from surrounding states unless it was produced under sanitary conditions at least equal to or better than the conditions required by Georgia law for milk production in Georgia."

"Another false report being circulated by my opponent is that I intend to shut down the state markets in Atlanta, Valdosta, Thomasville, Cartersville and elsewhere. There is not one single word of truth in this report. Every statement I have made, every piece of literature I have circulated, has been exactly to the contrary. I am not going to shut down the Atlanta market, but I do intend to give it a house cleaning and general fumigation and let there be no more curbstones operators have just about taken it."

"Another thing I am going to do with the Atlanta market, and that is to pay for the building materials that went into the construction of it. The commissioner of agriculture holds it up with pride as his greatest achievement, and yet there is owing on it for building material around $40,000. If its revenues had been handled in a business-like way, and if its concessions had been more to pay what they ought to pay, this debt could have been paid."

Reforms Promised.
Mr. Roberts outlined numerous other reforms which he promised to put in operation in the department of agriculture. Conspicuous among these, he said, would be "the complete eradication of politics" and the establishment of a strict business policy of efficiency and service."

"The Market Bulletin, under my administration, is going to be devoted to the purpose for which it was intended," he said. "It is now little more than a political loudspeaker for the commissioner of agriculture. Here in my hand is the last issue. One-half the entire space in it is political exploitation of the commissioner of agriculture. And bear in mind that the cost of publishing and circulating the Market Bulletin is paid by the farmers."

LARSEN DRIVE AID TURNS TO RIVERS
Spencer Powell, of Sylvania, Terms Speaker Best Man for Governor.

SYLVANIA, Ga., Aug. 26.—Spencer Powell, of this city, co-manager of the campaign of Judge W. W. Larsen for governor, today announced his support of the candidacy of Speaker E. D. Rivers. Judge Larsen withdrew from the race last week.

Mr. Powell is a former assistant attorney general of Georgia, serving by appointment of Governor Richard B. Russell Jr. His statement on the governor's race follows:

"It was a privilege and a pleasure to support Judge Larsen in his campaign for governor. I shall never regret my efforts in his behalf, as he has long been a personal friend of mine, and I admire him for his splendid character."

"Since Judge Larsen has decided not to run, I have not had the opportunity to withdraw from the race for governor to confer with him."

"As a citizen of Georgia, I feel it is my duty to take a stand, under the peculiar circumstances that exist in this state. I feel that as an individual I have a right and a duty to support the candidate I think best qualified for the position, and the candidate I think can defeat the present regime in Georgia."

"Therefore, I shall use my efforts in the interest of E. D. Rivers."

"SPENCER POWELL."

ETHERIDGE DINNER DRAWS CRITICISM

Watkins Asserts Plan Is To Disguise Event as Bar
Indorsement.

Charges that a testimonial dinner to be given by Atlanta lawyers for Paul S. Etheridge Sr. tonight at the Henry Grady hotel is merely an attempt to fool the public into thinking Etheridge has the indorsement of the bar in his race for judge of Fulton superior court were hurled yesterday by Edgar Watkins Sr., also a candidate to succeed Judge G. H. Howard, who is not offering for re-election.

Watkins' accusation came as Harry S. McCowan, secretary of a committee of lawyers on arrangements for the dinner, announced that more than 150 lawyers already have accepted invitations to attend the Etheridge dinner.

Philip Alston, prominent member of the bar, is to preside at the dinner and a series of addresses commending the civic and professional record of Etheridge are to be delivered. McCowan said several hundred lawyers are expected to take part in the program, which begins at 6 o'clock.

"This is but an effort to create the erroneous impression that Mr. Etheridge has the support of the bar," Watkins stated in a communication from his campaign headquarters. He called attention to the fact that he himself was selected as the choice of the bar association in its recent referendum. "Like a drowning man grasping at a straw, they are trying by a free dinner to mislead the public into believing the bar is behind Paul Etheridge's candidacy," Watkins asserted.

He declared the public will not be fooled by such tactics, and again called upon the voters to see the daily papers of June 3, 1933, to review Etheridge's record as a county commissioner.

Griffin Political Fiesta Is Unique In Georgia's Long, Colorful History

Young Junior Chamber of Commerce Does Self Proud in Little Trouble With Crowds.

By RALPH MCGILL,
Staff Correspondent.
GRiffin, Ga., Aug. 26.—Long before the first candidate's voice was to be heard, Griffin was awake.

The city, proud of its history, proud of its 96th birthday, loyal to its tradition of hospitality and friendship, had managed to take the political spotlight as no city before had done.

A Junior Chamber of Commerce, organized a few months ago, obtained the promises of all the leading candidates to appear on its platform and speak.

Tourists See Show.
And today they were here. Some came the night before. Tourists, passing through the city and asking the reasons for all the decorations, decided to remain over and see the show.

Cars started pouring in shortly after dawn. More than five states were represented before the day was done. And most of the counties in Georgia were represented.

Excited boys went about on their bikes with signs advertising their favorite candidates. Some had them on wagons.

Motorcycles began arriving early. They were there for Ed Rivers. The longest one of all was for Richard B. Russell. It included the 30 girls in their dashing uniforms of red and black, the Winder Girls' Drum and Trumpet Corp, the senator's "bodyguard," followed by the appearance of soldiers for Governor Eugene Talmadge, at a previous meeting.

Ox Cart Appears.
The cars were decorated with signs. Huge trucks arrived with their crowds. There were buggies, decrepit cars, fine cars, cheap cars, expensive cars and one ox cart.

Georgia's newest beverage, beer, was consumed so fast vendors hardly could get the bottles cold. And beer remained before the people as a non-indifferent. There were very, very few intoxicated men there.

It was a good natured crowd from the time Editor Quimby Melton gave the welcoming address in the morning until the last perspiring speaker had finished in the afternoon.

A gentleman who sat on a cotton bale and, with his hat directed the Talmadge cheering section, gave the crowd some laughs. He missed his cue now and then and an excited man on the stage rebuked him with a waving hand and a frowning face.

Statehouse Employees.
Practically every employee of the statehouse was there. There couldn't have been much, if any business, transacted at the capitol yesterday. They were there in the Talmadge crowd, as were most of the highway department men, hailing the chief.

Some vendors of soft drinks put tubs on the sidewalks and sold them there, creating congestion in traffic. Vendors of one particular soft drink, had special coolers about and could not keep bottles cold, so fast did they go.

Police reported a light day. The Griffin police were assisted by police from Atlanta.

A few fights occurred but none was a dangerous type. The combatants, swinging fists over the merits of their candidates, usually were separated before any real damage was done.

Fortson Heckled.
Only once did the master of ceremonies have to ask the crowd to give the speakers a respectful hearing. That was when the Athens candidate for governor, Judge Blanton Fortson, was speaking. The crowd heckled him and shouted for Rivers, who had just spoken. The judge was being heard with difficulty.

Griffin must have been very tired, but very happy when the day was done. The city had done itself proud. And the Junior Chamber of Commerce, despite its recent organization, had done the biggest job done by any of its associate chapters.

It was a unique day in Georgia politics.

National Committee Can-

Fortson headquarters yesterday quoted James A. Farley as saying the democratic national committee "has not expressed any preference as between Judge Blanton Fortson and Speaker Ed Rivers, candidates for governor of Georgia."

A Fortson statement said the national chairman telegraphed the comment in response to an inquiry from A. B. Lovett, of Savannah, Ga., chairman of the state Roosevelt campaign advisory committee.

"Both are democrats," the Fortson statement quoted the telegram as saying, "and both are supporting President Roosevelt and his administration. It would, therefore, be highly improper for the national committee to take sides as between them. Any impression to the contrary is without basis."

Russell Jr., and by Speaker E. D. Rivers, of the house of representatives, a candidate for governor.

The rally is expected to be one of the largest held in this section of the state during the present campaign.

Griffin Political Fiesta Is Unique In Georgia's Long, Colorful History

Young Junior Chamber of Commerce Does Self Proud in Celebration of 96th Home-Coming; Police Experience
Little Trouble With Crowds.

By RALPH MCGILL,
Staff Correspondent.
GRiffin, Ga., Aug. 26.—Long before the first candidate's voice was to be heard, Griffin was awake.

The city, proud of its history, proud of its 96th birthday, loyal to its tradition of hospitality and friendship, had managed to take the political spotlight as no city before had done.

A Junior Chamber of Commerce, organized a few months ago, obtained the promises of all the leading candidates to appear on its platform and speak.

Tourists See Show.
And today they were here. Some came the night before. Tourists, passing through the city and asking the reasons for all the decorations, decided to remain over and see the show.

Cars started pouring in shortly after dawn. More than five states were represented before the day was done. And most of the counties in Georgia were represented.

Excited boys went about on their bikes with signs advertising their favorite candidates. Some had them on wagons.

Motorcycles began arriving early. They were there for Ed Rivers. The longest one of all was for Richard B. Russell. It included the 30 girls in their dashing uniforms of red and black, the Winder Girls' Drum and Trumpet Corp, the senator's "bodyguard," followed by the appearance of soldiers for Governor Eugene Talmadge, at a previous meeting.

Ox Cart Appears.
The cars were decorated with signs. Huge trucks arrived with their crowds. There were buggies, decrepit cars, fine cars, cheap cars, expensive cars and one ox cart.

Georgia's newest beverage, beer, was consumed so fast vendors hardly could get the bottles cold. And beer remained before the people as a non-indifferent. There were very, very few intoxicated men there.

It was a good natured crowd from the time Editor Quimby Melton gave the welcoming address in the morning until the last perspiring speaker had finished in the afternoon.

A gentleman who sat on a cotton bale and, with his hat directed the Talmadge cheering section, gave the crowd some laughs. He missed his cue now and then and an excited man on the stage rebuked him with a waving hand and a frowning face.

Statehouse Employees.
Practically every employee of the statehouse was there. There couldn't have been much, if any business, transacted at the capitol yesterday. They were there in the Talmadge crowd, as were most of the highway department men, hailing the chief.

Some vendors of soft drinks put tubs on the sidewalks and sold them there, creating congestion in traffic. Vendors of one particular soft drink, had special coolers about and could not keep bottles cold, so fast did they go.

Police reported a light day. The Griffin police were assisted by police from Atlanta.

A few fights occurred but none was a dangerous type. The combatants, swinging fists over the merits of their candidates, usually were separated before any real damage was done.

Fortson Heckled.
Only once did the master of ceremonies have to ask the crowd to give the speakers a respectful hearing. That was when the Athens candidate for governor, Judge Blanton Fortson, was speaking. The crowd heckled him and shouted for Rivers, who had just spoken. The judge was being heard with difficulty.

Griffin must have been very tired, but very happy when the day was done. The city had done itself proud. And the Junior Chamber of Commerce, despite its recent organization, had done the biggest job done by any of its associate chapters.

It was a unique day in Georgia politics.

FARLEY NEUTRAL, FORTSON ASSERTS

Leader Quoted as Saying
National Committee Cannot Takes Sides.

Fortson headquarters yesterday quoted James A. Farley as saying the democratic national committee "has not expressed any preference as between Judge Blanton Fortson and Speaker Ed Rivers, candidates for governor of Georgia."

A Fortson statement said the national chairman telegraphed the comment in response to an inquiry from A. B. Lovett, of Savannah, Ga., chairman of the state Roosevelt campaign advisory committee.

"Both are democrats," the Fortson statement quoted the telegram as saying, "and both are supporting President Roosevelt and his administration. It would, therefore, be highly improper for the national committee to take sides as between them. Any impression to the contrary is without basis."

STATE FARM QUIET AFTER RIOT ENDS

Prison Board Members Probe Disturbance at Milledgeville.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., Aug. 26.—(P)—Quiet and peaceful was the way Superintendent R. H. Lawrence described conditions this morning at the Georgia state prison farm, scene of rioting Monday night and early yesterday morning.

During the rioting, one convict, W. P. McDaniel, escaping a term from Atlanta, was killed and 15 other prisoners were slightly wounded from shots by the guards.

Leaders in the stampede of convicts, including T. B. Rurree and Charles Searing, recently brought to Georgia from California prisons, are being punished, the superintendent said, by work. They are picking cotton under watchful eye of armed guards.

A suitable program was rendered in which special music was presented by Mrs. Finkie Craft, Wares, music director, and Miss Mary Lou Withers, assistant at the piano by John Wesley Craft, Mr. Craft is a teacher in the Gainesville public schools and was formerly organist at the Capitol View Methodist church in Atlanta.

Dr. Elan F. Dempsey, of Toocoo, conducted the invocation. Superintendent W. J. Andrews introduced the speaker, Honorable Ralph L. Ramsey, secretary of the Georgia Education Association, who gave a most inspiring address. Mr. Ramsey's theme was "Educational Democracy." He emphasized the fact that he was gratified at finding such marvelous educational opportunities for rural boys and girls as this school afforded, namely, vocational education and at the same time developing an appreciation for the finer things of life.

Many parents and visitors were present at the exercises which were presided over by Superintendent A. P. Farrar, who gave a short talk, in which he outlined the program for the year.

Only two changes were made in the membership of the faculty. Miss Dorothy Brown, of Martin, was elected as first grade teacher, and J. G. Fricke, of Bowdon, is a new teacher in the vocational department. Both new teachers received their degrees from the University of Georgia this year.

This school has on its faculty three full-time vocational agriculture teachers and two full-time home economics teachers and one full-time public school music teacher. The enrollment was 216 in high school. Some of these rode buses 12 and 14 miles to school.

Macon Recorder Wages War on Autoists Who 'Jump' Cash Bonds.

MACON, Ga., Aug. 26.—(P)—A long-planned crusade against alleged drunken automobile drivers in Macon crystallized today as Solicitor Oscar L. Long, of city court, obtained criminal warrants for 43 persons who have forfeited collateral in recorder's court since January 1 of this year.

"Warrants have been issued today for the arrest of 43 defendants who were charged in police court with the offense of driving automobiles while drunk," said the solicitor.

"These defendants have escaped punishment in the state courts by putting up cash collateral in recorder's court and purposely failing to appear for trial, allowing collateral to be forfeited so as to prevent being committed to the state courts for trial," he continued.

The solicitor said that his purpose was to decrease the number of drunken drivers to protect human lives.

High Court May Rule On Where Mate Got Itch

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—(P)—The supreme court was asked today for a ruling on whether the second mate of the vessel Covena contracted the itch from the ship's cook.

The Hammond Lumber Company, of Oregon, owner of the vessel which operates between Pacific coast and Gulf of Mexico ports, appealed from a ruling by the Oregon supreme court awarding Ralph Compton, the mate, $1,000.

State courts held the ship owner should have made a physical examination of the crew before the vessel sailed to ascertain if anyone had a contagious disease.

In its petition to the supreme court here, the lumber company asserted:

"There was no evidence that Compton had the itch; there was no evidence that the cook had the itch; there was no evidence that Compton got it from the cook; or that, if the cook had the itch, the ship owner knew of it before the ship left port, so he could do anything about it."

The court will announce in October whether it will review the controversy.

Return of Relative Prosperity

REPTILES UNMOVED OVER CAGEMATES

For Cotton Textiles Predicted

Predicting the year 1936 will mark the return of relative prosperity to that the consuming public will purchase goods in volume at current levels and that these transactions are profitable.

the cotton textile industry, with the fall season scheduled to be the best in years, W. Ray Bell, president of the Association of Cotton Textile Merchants of New York, yesterday issued a report in which he outlined the Retail sales were declared the most reliable measure of final consumption. This measuring rod showed an increase of 11 per cent in the consumption of cotton goods throughout the United States.

Although active spindle hours have increased during the first six months of 1936 nearly 14 per cent over the first half of 1935, at the present rate of consumption, allowing for seasonal variations, the demand will exceed the supply, the report stated.

Mill stocks in various cotton fabrics have been reduced by many millions of yards, according to the report; and fabrics have reached record yardages for the period, in some instances setting up an all-time record for unfilled orders.

Report of Executive.

In his report, the cotton textile association president said:

"In the technical and psychological conditions of the market, there has been a concurrent return to customary procedure, with the elimination of artificial elements and, especially, minimum risks in ownership of goods and contracts. Among the important de-avorable influence in the return of market transactions to the simple ways of supply and demand calculations may be detailed the following:

"(1) The passing of the processing tax. This handicap was an abnormal factor in the market which has been removed. The effect has been to put back the cotton plants to 35,117 spindles in place on June 30, 1938. Of these, over 5 million have been idle each month."

The "blanketing" was described by him as "a very unusual sort of fading—not the usual and expected 'summed fading.'" After about an hour of muffled singles, or silence, reception returned to normal, he said.

SKIN CANCER CAUSED BY TARRED ROAD DUST

Harvard Scientist Reveals Findings in Test on Mice.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 26.—(P)—An experiment in which the dust of tarred roads caused skin cancer in a large proportion of mice exposed to excessive dusting was reported at the Harvard University tercentenary celebration here today.

Human beings, it was pointed out, never breathe as much of this tar dust as the mice. The report was made in a symposium on "The Atmospheric Environment and Its Effects on Man" at the Harvard school of public health.

An "interesting effect," said Dr. Lawrence T. Fairhall, assistant professor of physiology, Harvard school of public health, "was recently obtained by Campbell who exposed mice to dust from tarred roads. This dust contained about five per cent tar. 'Cancer of the skin developed in 70 per cent of those surviving long enough and the incidence of primary abedoma of the lungs was increased tenfold that of the controls. Correlation of these facts with the debated increase in tumors of the human lung is difficult, if not impossible at present.'

"The mice were, of course, exposed to excessive dusting—much more than in the case with humans breathing tar-dusty air."

Tar has long been recognized by the medical profession as an irritant which causes cancer in both men and animals.

A new potential source of dust poisoning which is just beginning to enter industry was described by Dr. Fairhall. This is the use of the electric arc to produce intensely hot sparks to melt bits of metals for examination by the spectrograph.

DUPONT EXECUTORS ASK FOR FOUNDATION CASH

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 26.—(P)—Executors for the estate of the late Alfred I. Du Pont petitioned County Judge J. Ollie Edmunds today to turn over $1,000,000 in cash to the Xanadu Foundation, charitable enterprise established by terms of the will.

Du Pont directed that the foundation operate an estate in Delaware "for the care and treatment of crippled children, but not incurables, or the care of old men and old women, particularly old couples."

Citizens of Delaware should "be given preference," the will said.

Judge Edmunds ordered a hearing on the petition September 14, when interested persons may express their views.

The will provided the $1,000,000 would be paid from the principal of the estate, either after the death of the widow or during her lifetime, as she preferred.

TABLET UNVEILED.

HAVANA, Aug. 26.—(P)—A memorial tablet to Pierre Le Moyne d'Iberville, French explorer and colonizer, of Louisiana, was unveiled today in the cathedral here by French Minister W. Moraviecki Moreau.

CHILD IS INJURED

Albert S. Hoppoldt Jr. Hurt
at Daytona Beach.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Aug. 26.—(P)—Albert S. Hoppoldt Jr., four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hoppoldt, of Atlanta, was seriously injured today when he was struck by an automobile on the beach.

Police reported the child, walking along the sands with his mother, broke away and ran in front of an approaching car. He received a fractured skull and possible internal injuries.

Police said the driver of the automobile was Miss Elizabeth Gore, of Orlando, Fla. No charge was placed against her.

FATHER IS MANAGER OF ATHLETIC CLUB

Young Hoppoldt is a son of Albert S. Hoppoldt, manager of the Atlanta Athletic Club for many years. The Hoppoldts live at 578 Montgomery Perry drive, N. E.

Mr. Hoppoldt left for Florida when informed of the accident.

PRIMARY BOARD CALLS FOR NEW DEAL SUPPORT

NASHVILLE, Aug. 26.—(P)—The democratic state primary board canvassed returns of the August 6 primary today, declared the party's nominees after dismissing four contests and called for united support of the New Deal in the November election.

One contest—that for the nomination for federal representative from Madison and Henderson counties—was decided by holding no one was nominated because of affidavits that large numbers of "well-known republicans" had participated in the democratic balloting in Henderson county.

RISE FLOOD WATERS INUNDATE MEXICAN CITY

TAMPICO, Mexico, Aug. 26.—(P)—Rising flood waters of the Tamesi and Pampuco rivers tonight isolated Tampico from rail communications and inundated wider areas in low-lying suburbs.

Service on the Tampico-Monterrey railroad line remained closed, with little prospect it could be restored this week.

Trains from Mexico City were held at Tampos, a few miles outside the city, because the floods had submerged a wooden trestle. Food supplies were ferried the rest of the way by boats.

FIVE PERSONS BURNED AS YACHT EXPLODES

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 26.—(P)—A terrific explosion aboard the schooner-yacht Kinara hurled six persons into Halifax harbor tonight.

Five others on board were badly burned when flames quickly spread over the 50-foot pleasure craft.

Those seriously hurt were taken to a hospital after being rescued from the water or the burning hull. The condition of two women—Mrs. David MacKeen, of Ottawa, and Mrs. Harry C. MacKeen, of Halifax, was said to be "grave."

The craft formerly known as Bucca-ner II, was owned by John C. MacKeen, of Halifax.

An explosion tossed the boat violently and threw the six into the water.

Mrs. C. C. MacKeen and Mrs. David MacKeen each grasped two children who were hurled into the bay with them. A Halifax dock worker, 18-year-old Harold Slaughtwhite, dove from a pier to assist the struggling women and children.

MAN ENDS OWN LIFE WITH POISON POTION

A man who drank a poison portion at Whitehall and Mitchell streets yesterday morning, fell a few minutes later into a downtown doorway and was pronounced dead on arrival at Grady hospital, according to police.

The man, identified by papers in his pocket as H. B. Bryant, of 446 Strong street, was found lying in the vestibule at 128 1-2 Whitehall street by Patrolman J. W. West. Police recorded his case as a suicide.

POLISH GOVERNMENT TO PUNISH OFFICIALS

OTTAWA, Aug. 26.—(P)—The Canadian external affairs department was informed today the Polish government has expressed regret at the arrest of Mrs. Sonia Nordegg, wife of a former resident of Ottawa, who was held on a charge of technical violation of currency regulations.

The Polish government has stated punitive measures will be taken against officials responsible for the incident, which occurred at Rawicz, it was learned.

FASCIST ITALY TIGHTENS HOLD ON CORPORATIONS

ROME, Aug. 26.—(P)—Fascist Italy tightened its hold on corporate business today.

A decree, published in the official gazette, said corporations with a capitalization of 5,000,000 lire (approximately $300,000) or more must have at least one official accountant as a director if the total number of directors is three, and at least two official accountants if the total number is five.

Companies with smaller capitalization were made subject to virtually the same measure.

The decree also specified that directors of corporations may not be employees of their respective companies or their relatives, up to the fourth degree.

C.M.T. CAMP AT FORT CLOSED BY CEREMONY

General R. O. Van Horn
Stresses Value of Training to Youths.

The citizens military training camp at Fort McPherson closed yesterday morning with ceremonies marked by an address to the 537 trainees by General Robert O. Van Horn, fort commander, and presentation of medals to men outstanding in military and athletics activities.

William T. Hamilton, of Athens, was presented the corps area aide's leadership medal, donated by former Governor John M. Slaton. The award was based upon conception of civic responsibility, team work, athletics, military proficiency, force, marksmanship, command, courtesy, camp popularity and personality.

The medal was presented by Major W. V. Ochs, cavalry commander of the camp.

More than 100 medals were awarded men in training at the camp in athletics, including track, swimming, soft ball, boxing, bowling and horseshoe pitching, with the medal for the most outstanding athlete going to J. L. Dodson, who won several track events and was heavyweight boxing champion.

In military training, 21 men were given awards for outstanding work, with O. F. Bush winning a trip to Washington for proficiency.

General Van Horn, in his address, which closed the first citizens military camp held at Fort McPherson in 30 years, declared himself in favor of a strong national military organization as the best way to prevent aggressions by other countries and to maintain peace.

The speaker also stressed the value of the camp to the trainees in self-discipline and self-respect.

"I want to repeat what I told you at the start of the camp," he said, "if you are taking back with you to your homes, contained within yourselves, a little more self-discipline, self-respect and considerably more of the habits of obedience to your parents, to your employers and to the properly constituted authorities of law and order, and if you are also taking back with you better knowledge of your duties as citizens under our constitution and actively do your part to sustain it or to prevent others from running it down, then the camp in my opinion has been a success."

Mrs. Sanders Talks Entertainingly About Recent European Travels

By Sally Forth.

MRS. INMAN SANDERS is a European traveler who talks entertainingly of her recent sojourn abroad, which covered a several-month period. The pole-vaulter athletes taking part in the Olympic contests in Berlin excited her admiration and she experienced a breath-taking moment when each aspirant cleared the bar in a remarkable manner. The grounds around the stadiums were beautified with gorgeous flowers and a stand of velvety grass that appeared to have been planted 100 years ago, so perfectly did the landscaping fit into the scheme. The polo field resembled a sheet of green velvet and several hundred workmen kept it in the pink of perfection between chukkers.

Between the tall trees that lined both sides of Unter der Linden, the famous boulevard leading from the palace of the former Kaiser Wilhelm, mile after mile of poles were painted in black and gold, the German colors. Brilliant red banners embossed in black swastikas, the Hitler emblem, waved atop the poles and made an arresting and colorful spectacle for the eyes. The Olympic torches burned in massive urns placed upon magnificent marble pedestals in front of the palace, and the flow of flags forming the spectacular backdrop for the urns, representing every nation whose athletes took part in the Olympiad.

It was in Vienna that Mrs. Sanders was given an unforgettable trash-throwing lesson. Vienna is the city which the Atlantans assert is the cleanest in Europe and she now knows the reason of its cleanliness, because she peeled a luscious fig and threw the peeling in the streets. In less time than it takes to say so-a-t, four German-speaking people approached Mrs. Sanders and told her she would have to pick up the peeling and throw it in the near-by trash can. She smiled and did their bidding without a murmur. She answered the guardians of the law in German, and assured them she never would be guilty of such a careless act in Vienna, a city Mrs. Sanders often visits in her yearly travels in Europe.

Mrs. Sanders was accompanied on her trip by Laura Phinizy, of Athens; Callie Stringer, of Anderson, S. C.; Mary Branch, of Charleston, S. C.; Eleanor May, of New Orleans, and Mrs. Joseph Burton, of Atlanta. When they entrained at Florence to go to Naples, the four young girls engaged in a bridge game in their compartment. During the course of the journey, a young Italian officer boarded the train and entered the compartment where the girls were playing cards. As soon as one girl was dummy, she rushed to Mrs. Sanders' compartment and told her the best-looking man she had seen during their travels was in their compartment.

Like the careful chaperon that she is, Mrs. Sanders returned to the compartment with her charge and, to her amazement, the handsome young man turned out to be Umberto del Grandi, commander of the imperial Italian submarine fleet, with whom Mrs. Sanders is well acquainted. He gave a swanky party at the Orange Grove that same evening for the American girls and their popular chaperon. Mrs. Sanders considers meeting Commander del Grandi on the train an unusual coincidence that happens once in a lifetime.

In Budapest, Mrs. Sanders and her party revelled in the beauty of the St. Gellert hotel, which is modern in its architecture and furnishings. They rode on the electrically-made ocean waves in the pink marble pool and basked in the sunlight on the pink marble terrace to obtain a sun tan. When they swam in the pool they had to battle with waves as strong and as high as those in the Atlantic ocean, but they deemed it a thrilling and enjoyable undertaking.

SURPRISE birthday parties are having a special vogue, and ten of Mrs. J. J. Goodrum's friends entered into the spirit of the occasion and gave her a party last evening. The affair was planned by the devoted servants of the honor guest, who invited the guests and made all the necessary preparations for the interesting event.

Mrs. Goodrum worked all day as saleslady at The Omnibus, the Peachtree street shop wherein articles are sold on commission to help relieve distressed people. She is an ardent supporter of the project and nothing deters her from her Wednesday duties at the shop. An invitation to dine with Mrs. Edward H. Inman at her Andrews drive residence was ready at the appointed hour for her chauffeur to drive her to her destination.

In the meantime, the guests met at dark at the gate leading to her Pace's Ferry road home and took the unsuspecting Mrs. Goodrum completely by surprise when they marched into the house. Birthday cards engraved with humorous bits of sentiment suggestive of the honor guest's passing of another milestone, added to the merriment of the affair, and made Mrs. Goodrum feel that birthday anniversaries have many compensations when surrounded by loving friends.

Crape Myrtle Trees Put Forth Lovely Blossoms Despite the Summer Drouth

By Fletcher Pearson Crown, an Authority on Horticulture.

Many of us live our lives with our eyes. Some of us do remember to open them when we leave home for a trip to some distant state or foreign country. Then we come back with interesting news of these places, with wonderful descriptions of the beauties of nature that we saw while away. We have noticed so many unusual plants that do not grow near our homes, and we have looked at them with longing eyes and deep wishes that we might make our homes beautiful by growing them. Those who go to Florida tell of the many tropical plants which can so easily be grown there because of the frostless climate.

Bring Plants Home.
Some of us even fool ourselves into bringing these plants home to be kept in tubs or pots, and dragged in and out all during the winter so that we might brag with pride that we have an all-Florida plant. It is a pity that we feel that it is pitiful that we must have them in tubs or pots, and dragged in and out all during the winter so that we might brag with pride that we have an all-Florida plant. It is a pity that we feel that it is pitiful that we must have them in tubs or pots, and dragged in and out all during the winter so that we might brag with pride that we have an all-Florida plant.

The reason that I can tell these things so surely is because I, too, have been guilty of just this, until my eyes were opened. And this is the way that they are opened. I was spending a summer in Pennsylvania looking at the most beautiful gardens that could be found. One afternoon at an unusually lovely place we were seated on a terrace. Many plants had been placed all around this terrace in tubs; they were the prize possessions of this garden.

Some were sick looking pittosporums, some were ratty looking oleanders. Some were wizened looking orange trees and some were miserable looking crape myrtles. I had asked, seeing these plants in such a condition and knowing so well how they really do look in their proper setting. At the time I was studying landscape architecture and I decided definitely to learn to appreciate the beauty of the plants of our own section, rather than the plants that thrive under the climatic conditions of our section.

Beauty of Crape Myrtles.
Thus it is that during this hot and very dry summer I have especially noticed and enjoyed the beauties of our crape myrtles. Not once have they hesitated to put forth their new growth which in turn bears those crepey plumes of beautiful blossoms. Not one has died from the severities of the weather, in fact I have not seen one sick shrub in all my drives.

Being of a very pretty nature, as well as one who sees and loves all the beauties that God has given to us, I feel that it is wise to bring these lovely southern shrubs to your attention before they have passed on, to become only beautiful memories of fall and winter. We read of the lilacs of the north and grow sentimental over them. We regret that they will not cold enough to make them thrive for us. While they in turn regret that the severities of their winters make it impossible for them to grow, our lovely myrtles as they should be grown.

Not only are they easy to grow, they are also easy to propagate. After these lovely blossoms have passed on, we will find seed pods in great clusters on each branch. If these seeds are planted in the late fall after becoming thoroughly ripened they will grow in next spring with more surprise than one person is entitled to. These seedlings have no regard for the color of their parent blossoms, but they vary according to their own notions, all the way from purest white to the brightest red, with every tint of pink in between. They seem to grow more beautiful with cultivation, the clusters grow larger and the colors clearer. They can be used in the landscape planting in many ways, being used in the shrub borders by being kept pruned back each year, or if allowed to grow they will become trees with strange, smooth white bark. If, as we often do, we grow sentimental and wish for a plant of our own from some special tree in our grandmother's or mother's garden, we find that cuttings of this wonderful shrub will be easy to root if we put them in our rooting bed in the fall.

Wonderful Plant.
This shrub, with so many things in its favor should be in our gardens, it should line our streets in our cities and it should also be planted along our southern highways, wherever there is travel, so that those who ride may take back with them descriptions of this wonderful plant that grows and blooms with only the care given to it by mother nature herself. Probably when we hear visitors and strangers admiring its beauty we ourselves will open our eyes and become conscious of this gift that God has given to us.

Class Reception.
Members of the 1932 graduating class of Russell High school will hold a reception on Friday evening, at 8:30 o'clock, at the home of Miss Dorothy Allen in Hapeville. Plans for future activities will be discussed.

1949-B
BLACK SATIN FROCK FOR AUTUMN AND WINTER WEAR.

Introducing autumn's smartest frock. Snug at the waistline and flared below, a youthful interpretation with snap and dash. It's grand for business, school, socials, and a winning number at bunco or bingo!

The blouse has a clever feminine touch in its soft gathers that peek cunningly from beneath the yoke, which is topped by a narrow standing collar that ties in a narrow knot. To please your whim, omit the necktie; then again forget about the buttons, open the yoke, press down the sides forming a V and trim it with a bright boutonniere. You may have your way about the sleeves, too, for the pattern offers both, long and short. A graduated gore reduces the sweep at the hipline and gives the much desired flare to the hem.

Barbara Bell pattern No. 1949-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 (32) requires 4-3/8 yards of 36-inch material, 4-1/4 yards with short sleeves. Price of pattern 15 cents. Do not send stamps.

NANCY PAGE

This Saves Double Washing of Dishes

By FLORENCE La GANKE.

Nancy had grown tired of washing all the company dishes both before and after the company dinner. She found she could make some covers that would slip over a pile of plates and keep them free from dust and greasy grime.

Years ago she had a set and used Argentine cloth. This is a glazed tarlatan. The material is practically transparent and until the glass is broken it is impervious to dust. In hunting around the shops she found a new material. It was cellophane attached to a gauze. The gauze which was extremely open meshed was imbedded in the cellophane in such a way that there was a long life for the cellophane.

The material came in various colors and was not expensive.

She worked out a set of plate covers that were in varying sizes, first the size for the dinner plates, then for supper plates, for salad plates, dessert plates, bread and butter plates, and fruit saucers or sauce dishes.

She did not make any for cups. It is seldom that each cup can stand by itself and the fitting in of one cup in another is too loose and uncertain.

to let you work out any real covering. Nancy has the dimensions for all these covers worked out and in print in her direction leaflet. You may procure this by following the instructions given below.

In addition to the material itself you need bias tape. It may be chosen in any color. It binds the raw edges

Friendly Counsel

By CAROLINE CHATFIELD.

Problems of general interest submitted by readers will be discussed in this column. Correspondence invited. Your name held in confidence. Write Miss Chatfield, care The Atlanta Constitution, Chatfield, care The Atlanta Constitution.

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:
I am married to a man that I adore and he loves me but he is one of these incompetents who can't get a good job and can't hold the ones he lands. We are just as poor as decent people can be. Neither the children nor I have what we need in the way of clothes or entertainment. I have tried to arouse his ambition. I have tried to point out to him where he falls but nothing does any good. It is one job after another, each one paying less than the former. What is a wife to do with her children coming on and expenses growing every year?
DEPRESSED.

ANSWER:
You know the old sob line, "Love will find a way." Then buck up, sister, and do for your family what your husband can't. Remembering that every privation you are now suffering and every fear that oppresses you, gorges his heart and humbles his pride.

One of the most pitiable figures in the world is the incompetent man who gets married with the same high hopes that animate all men. He has the wish to take care of his wife in comfort. He believes in his ability to head up a home, have a family of children and give them good advantages but gradually he awakens to the bitter truth: he can't put it over. His pride is dragged in the dust. He looks at his wife and children and feels ashamed that they haven't what he wanted to give them but he is powerless to produce it.

Many of these incompetents, by some miraculous trick of mother nature, are led straight into the arms of smart women who can hold them up and supplement their deficiencies. Maybe the wives are a bit dashed when they come to and discover that they must help support the family or see the family suffer. But once they get going there is no limit to what they can do. Hundreds of them are making good in catering to fancy trade in party foods. Others with artistic bent are making and marketing novelties. Some are sewing their way to success and some are stepping out into business with brilliant results.

There is plenty for a wife to do when her husband can't make a living and her children are growing up and expenses are mounting, but she has got to be up and doing. She can't sit and mope, nor need she delude herself into believing that her husband will ever be a good provider.

CAROLINE CHATFIELD.

and covers the seam where the top is joined to the sides.

Nancy thought of sewing a small loop of tape in the center of each cover top. But finally she gave up the idea because she was afraid she might make some holes there that the dust would find.

In making the covers she put a dart as shown in the drawing on the direction leaflet. This lets the covers slip over the pile easily and yet holds the covers in place so they do not work up.

Nancy planned to make six sets of these to put into her gift box. Later they would appear as shower or Christmas gifts.

In the direction leaflet the dimension for the top is given. That dimension is the diameter. In working on the tops use half of it for radius to define the circle.

Culbertson on Contract

By ELY CULBERTSON.

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst.

Herewith is presented another portion of Mr. Culbertson's latest work on contract, the "Gold Book of Bidding and Play," which is being reproduced in this column in daily installments.

THE STRUCTURE OF A BID.

Bidding and play are not two radically distinct departments of the game, as is commonly believed. They are two different ways of playing the same hand. In order to reach the decision that led to the bid of three no-trump, for instance, I must mentally play out the hand at three no-trump, using roughly the same technique of play as though the dummy actually lay exposed before my eyes. During the bidding I combine my own hand with partner's unseen hand as imaginatively as possible, place in the opponents' the values shown by their bids, and "play out" the combined hands at a given bid. The final bid is simply an architect's finished drawing, according to which the player contracts to build his plays in combined hands.

Or it might be said that bidding is a prediction that a number of tricks as predicted by the final bid will be made in actual play. A good bidder is a good prophet.

Bidding, therefore, is mental play in which the same kinds of tricks are won or lost in the player's mind as with the exposed dummy, so that each deal of the cards is played twice, the first time during the bidding, but with abstract ghost tricks, and the second time with their concrete counterparts, the physical tricks. The bidding trick may, therefore, be defined as an abstract playing trick or an expected winner.

Although the only real difference from physical play is that the "bidding play" is mental, abstract, a sort of dress rehearsal for the real show that is to come, and requiring the player to train himself to a sort of bridge shadow-boxing, it must be remembered that the bidder must piece together the imaginary dummy's honor strength and various suit lengths from partner's or opponents' bids. To help partner locate the missing pieces in the puzzle of the combined hands is the object of partnership bidding.

The bidding:

South West North East

1 spade Pass 2 no trump Pass

3 diamonds Pass 3 spades Pass

4 spades Pass Pass

West opened the heart five and

East's ace topped dummy's queen. East feared that declarer's bidding indicated that he held only one club, and feared to lay down the ace and king because, if declarer ruffed the latter, dummy's third club would be established. Therefore East led a diamond! Declarer jumped in with the ace, led a trump to the ace, killed a losing club on the heart king and, after drawing trumps, conceded one club and one diamond.

East should have seen, of course, that even if South did ruff a club lead, one discard on dummy's set-up card would do no good whatever. The real danger was that a club trick would get away from the defenders, which was what happened.

TODAY'S QUESTION.

Question: When a player has passed originally, and then responds to partner's opening suit-bid with a double raise or a two no-trump take-out, is it forcing?

Answer: No.

TAKE WEIGHT OFF TIRED FEET

Less Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diet, or Back-Breaking, Bending and Rolling Exercises.

If your feet and ankles feel tired and ache all over—because you are carrying too much fat—do something about it. Try the treatment that has helped millions to reduce excess weight.

There's a reason why so many people find dieting slow and often times futile in reducing. The reason, doctors say, is often because a little gland is not working right.

All the blood in your body goes through this tiny gland sixteen times every day. If it doesn't pour into the blood stream about one and one-half drops of vital fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat. This fluid helps Nature to "burn up" excess food and fatty tissue in much the same way as a good "draft" acts in a furnace.

Now, physicians combat this condition by feeding this gland the substance it lacks—and millions of pounds of excess fat has been wiped out in this way.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on the same method used by doctors. So don't waste your time or money striving to reduce with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Start the Marmola treatment today that millions have used successfully to get rid of excess fat. The formula is in every box so you know just what you are taking. Don't wait—get a box of Marmola today from your druggist.

'YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!'

By IDA JEAN KAIN.

WEIGHT GAIN TAKES EFFORT.

A great many underweight persons make no effort to be really well. Lacking energy they follow the line of least resistance, get up too late for breakfast, run errands at noon, and are too tired at night to eat a balanced meal.

The tendency is to deplete their little store of energy, rather than build it up. Strange as it may seem to the overweight, weight gain is difficult for the thin, nervous individual, and what the healthy normal weight does as a matter of course, the asthenic underweight must deliberately plan. The program will include balanced meals, rest, activity.

Nutrition research reveals that most asthenic underweights eat too little food. You will not increase your appetite for food as long as you continue to eat a small amount of food, for capacity does not increase unless you add something to increase it. By gradually adding to the daily food intake, the capacity for more food is created and the appetite and appreciation are improved.

Time is an important element to the weight gainer. Instead of staying in bed until the last minute, get up for a leisurely breakfast that will sustain you through the long morning. You should take at least 20 minutes for breakfast. This is very little time to spend in bed, but plenty for breakfast, so get up earlier in the morning—and go to bed earlier at night if you are not getting adequate rest.

Take time for all your meals. On a weight-gaining program, unburied balanced meals are far more important than noon hour shopping flurries. Divert some of the energy you have been spending on unimportant things to your health-weight program and you will soon see results.

The weight-gaining rules are almost identical with the principles of healthy living and are the pattern for normal weight and health:

1. Have regular meal hours, beginning the day with a simple-but nourishing breakfast, with a definite interval between meals.
2. Do not hurry at mealtime (and as little as possible any other time). Chew your food thoroughly with time for appreciation.
3. Get plenty of whole grain cereals and whole grain breads for Vitamin B, which promotes appetite.
4. Eat a little meal with every meal and increase the food intake gradually. Do not overeat.
5. Eating between meals and skipping meals may upset your program. Sweets will take the edge off your appetite for a balanced, weight-gaining meal; missing a meal sets you back.
6. Evacuate regularly. Two complete evacuations daily are essential to health.
7. Get out into the air every day for exercise. Take a short walk or indulge in some light exercise. Supplement this outdoor activity with the exercises in the leaflet "Stretch the Fat From Your Waistline, Ribs and Wishbone."

NO. 509—Your greatest success in life will probably come through one of the artistic professions or work that requires a great deal of concentration on detail. You have a special aptitude for those lines of endeavor that deal directly with the public. You are progressive enough to keep on experimenting until you do find your true niche in life, and when this is accomplished, through application and endeavor, your financial problems will not give you much concern.

NO. 1008—You have a practical, intuitive and receptive mind, like investigating and experimenting with new things. You have many talents but do not possess sufficient confidence in yourself. You should cultivate the quality of self-confidence, do not become depressed if conditions move slowly, but seek to develop the talents given you at birth, when you will find that financial conditions will work themselves out in an easy and satisfactory manner.

NO. 1207—Marriage plays an important part in your success in life as you value harmony above all things. There will be times in your life when it seems inevitable that you will have to resort to lawsuits to secure your rights, but speaking generally you will find that by exercising a little patience and perseverance things will work themselves out without resort to courts of law.

My Day

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

NEW HAVEN, Tuesday.—Of all the camps run by the government I think the transient camps are the most interesting, if varieties of human beings interest you. Camp Saratoga was shown to me under the most favorable conditions, for the young assistant foreman who was my host spoke of the men in a way which made me smile and say:

"You really love these men, don't you?"
He replied with fervor: "Yes, I do!"

Originally the men in the camp had been, for the most part, older men. Of late, however, a group of younger ones averaging about 22 years of age have come from another camp which had been abandoned because it had been more of a school, whereas the regulations require productive work of everybody.

The first, and most noticeable thing, was the cleanliness. Everywhere, kitchens, dormitories, out of doors—scrubbed and neat. There is one big room used for recreation. Here they have a radio, magazines, and on the mantelpiece a horseshoe won by one of the men in a horseshoe throwing contest, and evidently considered the property of the camp.

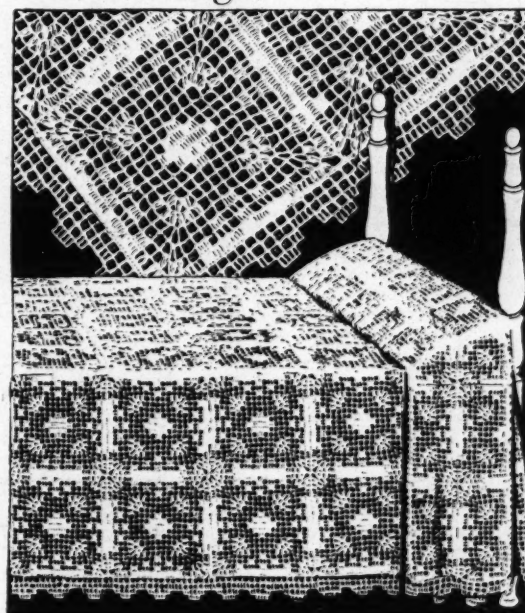

The food was good and after supper they went out to play a game of baseball. We watched for awhile and I had the feeling that, on the whole, temporarily at least, these men were fairly content. Certainly all those in charge of them had an interested and sympathetic attitude.

One young man, a foreigner, stopped me as I was going in and said he was a European nobleman and most grateful for what the government was doing. I could not help being touched. I reflected that he had at least more security as to his life under his present conditions. It was not likely that the government would demand that he be shot at dawn, a possibility faced by a good many people who inhabit certain European countries today.

We reached home about 10 p. m. and this morning when I got up I went into the pool. I felt that I might not have much more exercise during the day, for driving a car can hardly be termed exercise. I love to swim when the dew is still on the ground and everything is fresh and quiet. That feeling of having a new world all to oneself is a grand feeling.

We three breakfasted on the porch, and Major Hooker left us soon afterwards. After seeing my grandchildren and giving various orders so that all would be attended to until I returned, Mrs. Scheider and I started off for Westbrook, Conn.

We are now about halfway, and having just eaten our lunch under a tree, will proceed to finish the trip.

WE'LL MEET AGAIN

By MARGARET GORMAN NICHOLS

INSTALLMENT XXXI.

They went to a hotel for dinner. A string orchestra serenaded each lady with her favorite song. Gay tried to talk but a feeling that this was Friday and on Monday she would be Gregg's wife and be a part of a world she did not like or want swept over her like a hot wave. It was a feeling of being stifled and smothered and lost! For days the feeling had been growing, and now she wanted to run out and run away from stifling luxury and people who perused her. It was that song, inspired by Chris, "We'll Meet Again," played hauntingly, sweetly on a violin that made her say, "Gregg! Let's go, and get up and go out, leaving an astonished Gregg to follow her.

"Are you ill, Gay?" "No, I'm all right."

But when she got back to the house, the feeling that had prompted her to leave so rudely had not passed. It was as if a thousand violins were playing that song to her, and the world echoed with the maddening beauty of it and the urgent plea in it.

Going directly upstairs to her room, she did not turn on the light. The moonlight coming across the balcony fell upon her face and her white dress. In loneliness, she had told Gregg she would marry him. In loneliness now, except for that song that called her, she knew she could not marry him without love. Even if Chris were married to Evelyn Ewing, she could not marry Gregg and lead his kind of life. Even if she never saw Chris again, she could not marry a man toward whom she felt as if he were a brother or a casual friend. And in the end Gay knew she was being faithful to the values and ideals that Chris Mallory had taught her. To go into marriage without love was a sacrifice. To go into marriage because of gratitude was selling oneself at a price!

She got up slowly and went downstairs. The uncertainty and the strain that had been on her face for days was gone. She had never looked lovelier than now in a simple white silk dress and tall beaded white sandals.

Gregg was smoking. He looked at her, seeing that the struggle he had sensed in her was gone.

Gay walked toward him, hearing "We'll Meet Again" calling to her, beckoning to her. Her hands were steady now. The panic was gone. Except for telling Gregg, the way was clear and bright to Nassau. And her face had the look of one who has been ill and confused and who is now well and in the sun again.

"Feeling better?" he asked.

She smiled. It was a radiant smile. "Gregg, come out to the patio and smoke. It is a beautiful night, isn't it? There is something I must say to you."

And the night seemed to be filled and throbbing with that song. . . . They stood close to each other. Her lifted eyes that were clear and wise and beautiful.

"Gregg, I can't marry you. It isn't really you I'm turning down. Oh, you must understand! It's the life we'd have together. . . . your life you can't escape from because you were born to it. . . . and as your wife, I'd want to be the woman you want and need." Her voice was low and clear. "There is a man who showed me the kind of life I do want, Gregg. Unconsciously, he taught me. He didn't bring me down to a common level. He lifted me higher than I've ever been. Loving him has nothing to do with people or possessions. I think we could turn our backs on the whole world and find happiness together."

He inhaled deeply on his cigarette. "I see," he said.

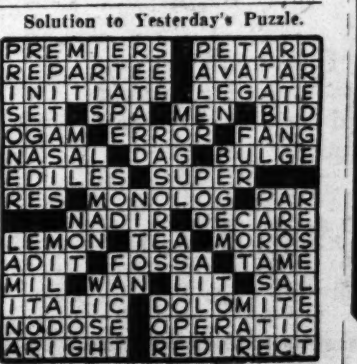

Gently she put her hand on his arm and spoke softly. "I don't want to be a great lady and live in fine houses and be hostess to the world, Gregg. I'm not the woman you want for your wife. I just want to love a man and share what he has and be with him and never be separated from him. Do you see, dear? You must understand because you've been so sweet and good to me. Forgive me."

"I took an unfair advantage of you," he said soberly, steadily. "If I had not been there that night, after your trying time at the charity ball, you'd never have promised to marry me. I knew that and that's why I was there. If I had not been there, you'd have gone in and spent one of the most wretched nights of your life, but the morning you'd have had your courage again and looked for another job. I've hurried the wedding because I was afraid you'd change your mind. You're in love with Chris Mallory, aren't you, Gay?"

"How did you know?" "I knew it the night we saw his play. I knew it tonight when they played that song."

"I don't want to hurt you, Gregg. Even if I didn't love Chris, I still couldn't marry you. It wouldn't be fair to you, not loving you enough." She drew away a little and lifted her head. "The world will call me mad for turning you down and all that you can offer a woman, I'm not mad, Gregg. I know what I want." Her eyes softened and there was a new light in them. "I'm going to Nassau and find Chris Mallory. I'm walking down a blind alley when I go. He may be married. He may not want me. But I'm going to him, Gregg. . . ."

JUST NUTS

He threw away the cigarette and looked directly at her. "Don't say it. Don't make apologies. In a triangle, one has always got to be the loser." He smiled. "I've spent a good many years in England, and the British are good losers. From the first day I saw you, I knew you were too good to be true."

She nodded. "I'm not the person for you. Really I'm not. I don't want to be elegant any more, and I wouldn't be a success as mistress of all your lovely homes. You see, Gregg, I came down with a terrific jolt. I hated it and then the ear became very sweet to me. I want to go back to it. But I'm still so terribly grateful to you and Millicent. And I know I— I'm leaving you in a very embarrassing position."

She shrugged at that. "Things pass. They blow over quickly. I'll still take the cruise I planned for us. Mother will go now. I think she wanted to go all the time."

"You're making it easier for me," said Gay. "It's very good of you."

Millicent came out of the patio. She looked first at Gay and then at her son.

"I overheard everything," she said, smiling. "You should have closed the door. Gay, my dear, don't look so miserable and don't blame yourself for anything. Hearing what you said made me think I've been a very selfish mother. I've been thinking only of Gregg's happiness, everything for him, and urging you to marry him."

She put her arm through Gregg's. "Thoroughbreds accept their losses gracefully." She laughed. "You know, I did hate to see that yacht sail away without me. Now I can go, Gay, I'm still young enough thank heaven, to remember the day I ran away from home and got a boat to England to marry Gregg's father. So I can appreciate how you feel now. . . ."

Gregg said, "Planes are faster." You can get a plane to Nassau tonight. If he should be married, if he should be married. . . .

"I'll go back to New York," said Gay and laughed. "I'm a trained dress model now!"

Millicent said, "Of course, we'll excuse you, darling. What are you waiting for?"

When she went to her room, she still could not believe that it was true. For a moment she could do nothing except stand in the middle of the floor and put her hands against her burning face. Gregg and Millicent, standing on the patio, how right they had looked together! There would be no wife with another man in her heart to come between their warm companionship. There would be another girl some day for Gregg, a young, beautiful girl, proud to be mistress of his many homes and hostess to his friends. . . .

She packed a few things, pulled a yellow hat over her hair, a short yellow coat over her white dress. Gregg and Millicent were waiting in the hall downstairs.

"We like to think that those friends who are always talking off with our last pack of cigarettes are just absent-minded. They surely couldn't be swiping our cigarettes purposefully. Our friends aren't like that. We feel quite confident that it is just a habit, probably formed in college, of pocketing small objects."

However, it does create a problem. Certainly speaking to the cigarette snatcher is no good because whenever we're tried that it has always turned out that the package he took really was his after all, and ours is hiding under the sofa."

We heard of one man—a bachelor—who kept his cigarettes in a locked box. And every time a guest wanted a smoke he carefully unlocked the box, gave him one, and then locked the box again. This seems to us a bit inhospitable. But it is suggestive. A box, whether locked or unlocked is harder to put in a pocket than a package."

So, if we can remember it, we're going to keep our cigarette boxes full from now on and hide our surplus supply of packages in among the hankies. JEAN.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

IV—GRIZZLIES

Just the name of a grizzly bear is enough to make a person "sit up and take notice." This is the fiercest animal in North America. No man—not even a champion boxer or wrestler—could stand against a grizzly or any other big bear in a fight without weapons.

Grizzlies have learned to fear the weapons of white men, the rifles which can send bits of lead through the air with terrible force. They get out of the way when they see or smell a human being, but they will fight if wounded or cornered or if they feel they must defend their cubs.

Big grizzlies have a length of from six to eight feet, and weigh from 600 to 1,000 pounds. The heaviest on record was kept in a zoo in Union Park, Chicago, for a period of 18 years. It weighed 1,153 pounds, having grown fat while captive.

Most stories are told of grizzly bears, but I shall give just one today. A gold miner was working in a small stream in southern Colorado when he glanced up and saw a big grizzly only 30 feet away. Instead of letting the animal alone, as would have been better, he picked up his rifle and fired. The bullet struck the bear, but only wounded it. The miner did not have time to load his gun again, so he ran to climb a tree, and got out of reach just in time. The angry beast clawed at the tree trunk.

That was good for the moment, but the bear stayed under the tree and waited for the man to come down. Since his rifle was on the ground, the man was a prisoner. About three hours later he saw the bear go away, and got down from the tree—but just then he saw the bear leap out from some bushes, so up he climbed again, not a moment too soon.

Night came and the gold miner tied himself to the branches to keep from falling while he slept. In the morning he saw the bear waiting below. Then an idea came to him. Tied to his waist he had a little bag containing some dried pieces of meat, and he also had a little bottle containing a powerful sleeping drug. On the meat he placed some of the liquid, and tossed it down. The bear ate it, and in half an hour went to sleep. Then the man got down to the ground, obtained his rifle again, and fired a fatal bullet into the big beast.

That, at least, is the story, and it may be true. Many cases are certainly known where men have escaped grizzlies by climbing trees. Black bears are fairly good at tree-climbing, but full-grown grizzlies cannot get up straight trunks. Grizzly bear cubs, to the age of about two years, have been known to climb trees, but they are not nearly so dangerous as the full-grown bears.

Another proof of the fastest field ever entered for a city tournament is that Dave Black, a former state winner; Forrest Fowler, a quarter-finalist in the recent state tournament;

Druid Hills with Dr. Julius Hughes, 73, Stanley Holditch, 76, Bob Cousins 77, and Jack Bothamley 79, won second team prize. Capitol City, 310, was third; West End, 327, fourth, and Ansley Park, 328, finished fifth.

Durham Allows Smokies Six Hits as Crackers Win Final, 3-1

BOBBY SCORES 15TH TRIUMPH; MAILHO IS HERO

Hill, Chatham, Hooks
Star Afield; Lindsey
Faces Chicks Today.

By Jack Troy.

Playing like champions which is, of course, what they are, the Crackers last night defeated the Smokies, 3 to 1, and took the series by the same count, three games to one.

Steady Bobby Durham allowed the Smokies only six hits in their final appearance of the year at Ponce de Leon park. Bobby, winning his 15th game, has earned a rest. His last start saw him go 16 innings against the Little Rock Travelers and lose the game on an error.

Bobby was in great form last night. He was in minor trouble in the first when Marshall Mauldin, Atlanta boy, tapped a double off Johnny Hill's glove and eventually scored what proved to be the Smokies' only run. Again in the fourth, Durham had some more trouble of a minor nature, but the Smokies did not score. Otherwise, Durham had the Smokies in the palm of his hand.

MAULDIN MAULS.

That is, all save Marshall Mauldin. He collected four of the six hits. The victory allowed the Crackers to hold their lead of 10 games. Nashville defeated Chattanooga in the afternoon but gained no ground.

And so, with the games rapidly running out, the Crackers are just before calling the second straight Southern league pennant to the mast. Last night's paid crowd of 5,292 ran the season's total to 275,575.

The Memphis Chicks move in this afternoon for a four-game series. Jim Lindsey, veteran pitching star, will pitch the opener, starting at 4 o'clock. Emil Mailho, fleet left-fielder of the Crackers, was the hero of last night's game. Ray Moss had held the Crackers scoreless during the first two innings and there were two men out when Mailho came to bat in the fifth with runners on first and third. Mailho delivered. He slashed a

17-Year-Old Farm Boy Strikeout Sensation

Only 17 years old, Bob Feller, pitching his first full game last Sunday for the Cleveland outfit, came within one strikeout of the American league record of 16. Young Feller hopped straight from an Iowa farm to Cleveland, and is now regarded as one of the prize rookies. He's pictured here with a close-up of the grip he uses for his fast ball. A. P. photo.

Bob Feller, of Indians, Likened to Immortals

Whiffing of 15 Browns Was Preceded by Fanning of 8 Cards in Three Innings.

By Jack Cuddy.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—(UP)—All of a sudden the Cleveland Indians have unveiled a brand-new "boy wonder" of the mound, a 17-year-old Iowa schoolboy named Bob Feller, who amazed the baseball world Sunday by striking out 15 batters of the St. Louis Browns in his major league debut.

Even if this husky, brown-haired, fair-skinned lad from the tall corn state never had struck out anyone before, his feat would have been hailed as sensational—coming, as it did, within just one strikeout of equaling the American league record of 16 established by Rube Waddell in 1908.

A wide throw, kicked the bag and retired the runner at first.

Chatham ended the game with a great leaping stab of Webb's high bouncer and retired him at first. The Crackers, as said, were displaying their true colors. They were playing like champions.

Johnny Hill and Emil Mailho led the hitting. Each got a double and single. Hill's double hit that Model sign in right field, being quite a drive. Only fast fielding by Earl Webb held him to two sacks.

Another outstanding play in a game crammed with fielding features was Alex Hooks' brilliant one-handed stop of Webb's smash in the sixth, retiring him by way of Durham, who covered first.

Mauldin rapped a double off Hill's glove and scored the Smokies' first run in the first inning. Mauldin took third when Finarto grounded to Hooks and scored on Caldwell's single through the box.

MAILHO DOUBLES.
Emil Mailho's timely double put the Crackers back in the game in the fifth. His drive, coming with two men out and two men on, cleaned the sacks and sent the champions ahead.

Browne forced Hill, who had singled, and went to second on Durham's single. Finarto made a brilliant stop of Hamel's infield smash and Browne was held to third. Mailho then came up and slashed a double down the first-base line, scoring Browne and Hamel, the latter scoring all the way from first base.

The Crackers scored again in the sixth. Richards singled and Chatham drove him to third with another single. Then Richards scored on Hill's long fly to Mauldin.

at 18. His second of the 515-yard par five 18th hole was well on the green, for one of his best shots of the day. Hughes had only three one-putt greens. Brown followed Hughes with another 73, due mainly to seven one-putt greens. Putting is Brown's strongest point and it was his excellent play on the greens which won him a state championship recently.

The kid had only three birdies and had to drop those putts at crucial moments to keep pace with the leaders. He dropped an 18-footer on the 18th green for a climax to his good round. He played the sixth and 13th holes badly and missed a long putt on 17 as the ball bounded out of the cup.

IN THE DITCHES.

Street, a former Tech golfer, found his trouble in the ditches. He went one over par at the third, 11th, 13th and 14th, due to "water trouble," and only fine recovery shots, several from the water, kept him in the battle for medal honors. A long putt at 17, which rimmed the cup was one of his best of the day. He had one-putt greens in succession at four, five and six, carded birdies at five, six and eight, and a short putt shot at 18, which barely rolled on the green, cost Street a fine chance to win the medal.

Elliott Haas and Jack Exell, two of the late finishers, gave the large gallery around the 18th green plenty of excitement. Both had chances to get in under the wire and eliminate a play-off. Both took too many strokes around the green and dropped into the second flight, one stroke past the play-off.

It was one of those inevitable play-offs, as usual was finished in the dark. It has been many years since a major tournament has been played in the city in which a play-off was not necessary. Three extra holes were played in the state on the Capital City course after dark.

Vance, Lefty Grove, Dizzy Dean or Carl Hubbell.

Umpire Emmet Orsberg, said afterward: "That Feller showed me more speed than I've ever seen uncorked by any American league pitcher. And that does not except Walter Johnson." After the exhibition game on July 6, Dizzy Dean said: "That kid's a natural. He's got everything. He can't miss." And on the same day, Manager Frankie Frisch, of the Cardinals, commented: "He's the best looking new pitcher I've seen since as the Crackers explain:

"This guy REALLY pitches one. He can get it over the plate."

That's the difference.

WINNING 100 GAMES.

The Crackers have 21 more games to play. They can—even if the odds are almost too much—win 100 ball games. Only one ball club has won that many games. The Memphis club three times has won at least 100 games.

The Chicks won 104 games in 1921. In 1924 they won the same number. Atlanta won 99 that year (91 usually win a pennant) and yet finished second.

The good year 1932 supplied the most weird result of them all.

Memphis won 101 games that year. Chattanooga won 98.

Yet Chattanooga won the pennant.

The difference was that Memphis in winning 101 games lost 53 and Chattanooga, winning 98, lost 51 and had an advantage of two percentage points.

That was the year Judge Landis won the pennant for Chattanooga by ordering a game played on an off-day. Chattanooga won it—and the pennant.
